 They bewrayed some knowledge of their persons, but were outfaced.
 To stare down.
 We behold the sun and enjoy his light, as long as we look towards it circumspectly: we warm ourselves safely while we stand near the fire; but if we seek to outface the one, to enter into the other, we forthwith become blind or burnt.
OUTFAWN. v. a. [out and fawn.] To excel in fawning.
 In affairs of less import,
 That neither do us good nor hurt,
 And they receive as little by,
 Outfawn as much and out-comply.
OUTFLY. v. a. [out and fly.] To leave behind in flight.
 His evasion wing'd thus swift with scorn,
 Cannot outfly our apprehensions.
 Horoscopus great foul,
 Rais'd on the pinions of the bounding wind,
 Outflew the rack, and left the hours behind.
OUTFORM. n. s. [out and form.] External appearance.
 Cupid, who took vain delight
 In meer outforms, until he lost his sight,
 Hath chang'd his soul, and made his object you.
OUTFROWN. v. a. [out and frown.] To frown down;
 to over-bear by frowns.

OUT

For thee, oppress'd king, am I cast down, Myself could else outfrown false fortune's frown.
OUTGATE. n. s. [out and gate.] Outlet; passage outwards.
 Those places are so fit for trade, having most convenient out-gates by divers ways to the sea, and in-gates to the richest parts of the land, that they would soon be enriched.
OUTGIVE. v. a. [out and give.] To surpass in giving.
 The bounteous play'r outgave the pinching lord.
OUTGO. v. a. [out and go.] To surpass; to excel.
 For frank, well ordered and continual hospitality, he out-went all shew of competence.
 While you practis'd the rudiments of war, you out-went all other captains; and have since found none but yourself alone to surpass.
 Where they apply themselves, none of their neighbours out-go them.
 To go beyond; to leave behind in going.
 Many ran afoot thither out of all cities, and out-went them, and came unto him.
 To circumvent; to overreach.
 Thought us to have out-gone
 With a quaint invention.
OUTGROW. v. a. [out and grow.] To surpass in growth;
 to grow too great or too old for any thing.
 Much their work outgrew,
 The hands dispatch of two, gard'ning so wide.
 It shoots too fast and high.
 This essay wears a dress that possibly is not so suitable to the graver genius, who have outgrown all gaieties of stile and youthful relishes.
 The lawyer, the tradesman, the mechanic, have found so many arts to deceive, that they far outgrow the common prudence of mankind.
OUTGUARD. n. s. [out and guard.] One posted at a distance from the main body, as a defence.
 As soon as any foreign object presses upon the sense, those spirits which are posted upon the out-guards, immediately scower off to the brain.
 You beat the outguards of my master's host.
 These out-guards of the mind are sent abroad,
 And fill parolling beat the neighboring road,
 Or to the parts remote obedient fly
 Keep posts advanc'd, and on the frontier lye.
OUTJEER. v. a. [out and jeer.] To over-power by jesting.
 The fool labours to outjeer
 His heart struck injuries.
OUTKNAVE. v. a. [out and knave.] To surpass in knavery.
 The world calls it out-witting a man, when he's only outknave'd.
OUTLANDISH. adj. [out and land.] Not native; foreign.
 Yourself transplant
 A while from hence: perchance outlandish ground
 Bears no more wit than ours; but yet more scant
 Are those diversions there which here abound.
 Tedious waste of time to fit and hear
 So many hollow compliments and lies, Outlandish flatteries.
 Upon the approach of the king's troops under General
 Wills, who was used to the outlandish way of making war, we put in practice passive obedience.
OUTLAST. v. a. [out and last.] To surpass in duration.
 Good housewives, to make their candles burn the longer, lay them in bran, which makes them harder; inasmuch as they will out-last other candles of the same stuff, half in half.
 Summer's chief honour, if thou hadst outlasted,
 Bleak winter's force that made thy blossoms dry.
 The present age hath attempted perpetual motions, whose revolutions might outlast the exemplary mobility, and out-measure time itself.
 What may be hop'd,
 When not from Helicon's imagin'd spring,
 But sacred writ, we borrow what we sing?
 This with the fabric of the world begun,
 Elder than light, and shall outlast the fun.
OUTLAW. n. s. [out-laga, Saxon.] One excluded from the benefit of the law. A blunderer; a robber; a bandit.
 An outlaw in a castle keeps.
 Gathering unto him all the scatterlings and outlaws out of the woods and mountains, he march'd forth into the English pale.
 As long as they were out of the protection of the law; so as every Englishman might kill them, how should they be other than outlaws and enemies to the crown of England?
 You may as well spread out the unsun'd heaps
 Of misers treasure by an outlaw's den,

OUT

And tell me it is safe, as bid me hope Danger will let a helpless maiden pass.
 A drunkard is outlaved from all worthy and creditable converse: men abhor, loath, and despite him.
OUTLAW. v. a. To deprive of the benefits and protection of the law.
 I had a son
 Now outlaw'd from my blood; he fought my life.
 He that is drunken,
 Is outlaw'd by himself: all kind of ill
 Did with his liquor slide into his veins.
 Like as there are particular persons outlaved and proscribed by civil laws, so are there nations that are outlaved and proscribed by the law of nature and nations.
 All those spiritual aids are withdrawn, which should assist him to good, or fortify him against ill; and like an out-laved person he is exposed to all that will assault him.
OUTLAWRY. [from outlaw.] A decree by which any man is cut off from the community, and deprived of the protection of the law.
 By proscription and bills of outlawry,
 Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
 Have put to death an hundred senators.
 Divers were returned knights and burgesses for the parliament; many of which had been by Richard III. at-tainted by outlawries.
OUTLEAP. v. a. [out and leap.] To pass by leaping;
 to start beyond.
OUTLEAP. n. s. [from the verb.] Sally; flight; escape.
 Since youth must have some liberty, some outleaps, they might be under the eye of a father, and then no very great harm can come of it.
OUTLET. n. s. [out and let.] Passage outwards; discharge outwards; egress; passage of egress.
 Colonies and foreign plantations, are very necessary, as outlets to a populous nation.
 The enemy was deprived of that useful out-let.
 So 'scapes th' insulting fire his narrow jail,
 And makes small outlets into open air.
 Have a care that these members be neither the inlets nor outlets of any vices; that they neither give admission to the temptation, nor be expressive of the conception of them.
OUTLINE. n. s. [out and line.] Contour; line by which any
 Painters, by their outlines, colours, lights, and shadows, represent the same in their pictures.
OUTLIVE. v. a. [out and live.] To live beyond; to survive.
 Will these moss'd trees,
 That have outliv'd the eagle, page thy keels,
 And skip when thou point'st out.
 Die two months ago, and not forgotten,
 Yet then there is hopes a great man's memory
 May outlive his life half a year.
 He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
 Will stand a tiptoe when this day is nam'd.
 His courage was so signal that day, that too much could not be expected from it, if he had outlived it.
 Thou must outlive
 Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change
 To wither'd, weak, and gray.
 Time, which made them their fame outlive,
 To Cowley scarce did ripeness give.
 The soldier grows less apprehensive, by computing upon the disproportion of those that outlive a battle, to those that fall in it.
 Since we have lost
 Freedom, wealth, honour, which we value most,
 I wish they would our lives a period give;
 They live too long who happiness outlive.
 It is of great consequence where noble families are gone to decay; because their titles outlive their estates.
 Pray outlive me, and then die as soon as you please.
OUTLIVER. n. s. [out and live.] A survivor.
OUTLOOK. v. a. [out and look.] To face down; to browbeat.
 I call'd these fiery spirits from the world,
 To outlook conquest, and to win renown,
 Ev'n in the jaws of danger and of death.
OUTLUSTRE. v. a. [out and lustre.] To excel in brightness.
 She went before others I have seen, as that diamond of yours outlustrs many I have beheld.
OUTLYING. part. adj. [out and lie.] Not in the common course of order. Removed from something else.
 The last survey I propos'd of the four out-lying empires, was that of the Arabians.
 We have taken all the out-lying parts of the Spanish monarchy, and made impressions upon the very heart of it.
OUTMEASURE. v. a. [out and measure.] To exceed in measure.

OUT

The present age hath attempted perpetual motions and engines, and those revolutions might out-last the exemplary mobility, and out-measure time itself.
OUTNUMBER. v. a. [out and number.] To exceed in number.
 The ladies came in so great a body to the opera, that they outnumbered the enemy.
OUTMARCH. v. a. [out and march.] To leave behind in the march.
 The horse out-marched the foot, which, by reason of the heat, was not able to use great expedition.
OUTMOST. adj. [out and most.] Remotest from the middle.
 Chaos retir'd,
 As from her outmost works a broken foe.
 If any man suppose that it is not reflected by the air, but by the outmost superficial parts of the glass, there is still the same difficulty.
 The generality of men are readier to fetch a reason from the immense distance of the starry heavens, and the out-most walls of the world.
OUTPARISH. n. s. [out and parish.] Parish not lying within the walls.
 In the greater outparishes many of the poorer parishioners, through neglect, do perish for want of some heedful eye to overlook them.
OUTPART. n. s. [out and part.] Part remote from the center or main body.
 He is appointed to supply the bishop's jurisdiction and other judicial offices in the outparts of his diocese.
OUTPACE. v. a. [out and pace.] To outgo; to leave behind.
 Arion's speed
 Could not outpace thee; or the horse Laomedon did breed.
OUTPOUR. v. a. [out and power.] To emit; to send forth in a strain.
 He looked and saw what number, numberless
 The city gates outpour'd; light arm'd troops
 In coats of mail and military pride.
OUTPRIZE. v. a. [out and prize.] To exceed in the value set upon it.
 Either your unparagon'd mistress is dead, or She's outprized by a trifle.
OUTRAGE. v. a. [outrager, Fr.] To injure violently or contumeliously; to insult roughly and tumultuously; to endangering life.
 Ah heavens! that do this hideous act behold,
 And heavenly virgin thus outraged see;
 How can the vengeance just so long withhold! Fa. Queen.
 The news put divers young bloods into such a fury, as the English ambassadors were not without peril to be outraged.
 Base and insolent minds outrage men, when they have hopes of doing it without a return.
 This interview outrages all decency; she forgets her modesty, and betrays her virtue, by giving too long an audience.
OUTRAGE. v. n. To commit exorbitancies.
 Three or four great ones in court will outrage in apparel, huge hose, monstrous hats, and garish colours.
OUTRAGE. n. s. [outrage, Fr.] 1. Open violence; tumultuous mischief.
 He wrought great outrages, warring all the country where he went.
 He doth himself in secret shrowd,
 To fly the vengeance for his outrage due.
 In that beastly fury
 He has been known to commit outrage,
 And cherish factions.
 Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
 And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd;
 My charity is outrage.
 2. This word seems to be used by Phillips for mere commotion, without any ill import, contrary to the universal use of writers.
 See with what outrage from the frosty north,
 The early valiant Swede draws forth his wings
 In battailous array.
OUTRAGIOUS. adj. [outrageux, French.] It should, I think,
 be written outrageous; but the custom seems otherwise.
 1. Violent; furious; raging; exorbitant; tumultuous; turbulent.
 Under him they committed divers the most outrageous villanies, that a base multitude can imagine.
 As she went her tongue did walk,
 In foul reproach and terms of vile despatch,
 Provoking him by her outrageous talk,
 To heap more vengeance on that wretched wight.
 They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
 Outragious as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild.
 When he knew his rival freed and gone,
 He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
 He frets, he fumes, he flares, he stamps the ground;
 The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around.
 2. Excessive;

OUT

2. Excessive; passing reason or decency.
My characters of Antony and Cleopatra, though they are favourable to them, have nothing of outrageous panegyric.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. Enormous; atrocious.
Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd.
Shakefp. Hen. VI.
OUTRAGEOUSLY. adv. [from outrageous.] Violently; tumultuously; furiously.
That people will have colour of employment given them, by which they will poll and spoil so outrageously, as the very enemy cannot do worse.
Spenser on Ireland.
Let lust burn never so outrageously for the present, yet age will in time chill those heats.
South's Sermons.
OUTRAGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from outrageous.] With fury; with violence.
Virgil, more discreet than Homer, has contented himself with the partiality of his deities, without bringing them to the outrageousness of blows.
Dryden.
OUTREACH. v. a. [out and reach.] To go beyond.
This usage is derived from so many descents of ages, that the cause and author outrach remembrance.
Carew.
Our forefathers could never dream of high a crime as parricide, whereas this outracher that fact, and exceeds the regular distinctions of murder.
Brown.
TO OUTRIDE. v. a. [out and ride.] To pass by riding.
This advantage age from youth hath won,
As not to be outridden, though out-run.
Dryden.
OUTRIGHT. adv. [out and right.]
1. Immediately; without delay.
When these wretches had the rope about their necks, the first was to be pardoned, the last hanged outright.
J. Bull.
2. Completely.
By degrees accomplish'd in the beast,
He neigh'd outright, and all the steed exprest.
Addison.
TO OUTROAR. v. a. [out and roar.] To exceed in roaring.
O that I were Upon the hill of Babel, to outricar
The horned herd!
Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.
OUTRODE. n. f. [out and rode.] Excursion.
He set horsemens and footmen, to the end that issuing out, they might make outrades upon the ways of Judea.
1 Mac. xv. 41.
TO OUTROOT. v. a. [out and root.] To extirpate; to eradicate.
Pernicious discord seems Outrooted from our more than iron age;
Since none, not ev'n our kings, approach their temples
With any mark of war's destructive rage,
But sacrifice unarm'd.
Rowe's Amb. Step-Mother.
TO OUTRUN. v. a. [out and run.]
1. To leave behind in running.
By giving th' house of Lancaster leave to breathe,
It will outrun you, father, in the end.
The expedition of my violent love
Outruns the pauser reason.
Shakefp. Macbeth.
We may outrun,
By violent swiftness, that which we run at.
Shakefp.
When things are come to the execution, there is no secrecy comparable to celerity, like the motion of a bullet in the air, which flieth so swift as it outruns the eye.
Bacon.
This advantage age from youth hath won,
As not to be out-riden, though outrun.
Dryden.
2. To exceed.
We outrun the present income, as not doubting to reimburse ourselves out of the profits of some future project.
Addison.
TO OUTSAIL. v. a. [out and sail.] To leave behind in sailing.
The word signifies a ship that outsails other ships.
Broome.
TO OUTSCORN. v. a. [out and scorn.] To bear down or confront by contempt; to despise; not to mind.
He strives in his little world of man t' outscorn
The to and fro conflicting wind and rain.
Shakefp.
TO OUTSELL. v. a. [out and sell.]
1. To exceed in the price for which a thing is sold; to sell at a higher rate than another.
It would soon improve to such a height, as to outsell our neighbours, and thereby advance the proportion of our exported commodities.
Temple.
2. To gain an higher price.
Her pretty action did outsell her gift,
And yet enrich'd it too.
Shakefp. Cymbeline.
TO OUTSHINE. v. a. [out and shine.]
1. To emit lustre.
Witness my son, now in the shade of death;
Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness folded up.
Shakefp. R. III.
2. To excel in lustre.
By Shakespeare's, Johnson's, Fletcher's lines,
Our stage's lustre Rome's outshines.
Denham.
Beauty and greatness are so eminently joined in your royal highness, that it were not easy for any but a poet to deter-

- mine which of them outshines the other.
Homer does not only outshine all other poets in the variety, but also in the novelty of his characters.
Addison.
We should see such as would outshine the rebellious part of their fellow-subjects, as much in their gallantry as in their cause.
Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 24.
Such accounts are a tribute due to the memory of those only, who have outshone the rest of the world by their rank as well as their virtues.
Atterbury's Sermons.
Happy you!
Whose charms as far all other nymphs outshine,
As others gardens are excell'd by thine.
Pope.
TO OUTSHOOT. v. a. [out and shoot.]
1. To exceed in shooting.
The forward youth
Will learn to outshoot you in your proper bow.
Dryden.
2. To shoot beyond.
Men are resolv'd never to outshoot their forefathers mark; but write one after another, and so the dance goes round in a circle.
Norris.
OUTSIDE. n. f. [out and side.]
1. Superficies; surface; external part.
What pity that to exquire an outside of a head should not have one grain of sense in it.
L'Estrange.
The leathern outside, boist'rous as it was,
Gave way and bent.
Dryden.
2. Extreme part; part remote from the middle.
Hold an arrow in a flame for the space of ten pulses, and when it cometh forth, those parts which were on the outside of the flame are blacked and turned into a coal.
Bacon.
3. Superficial appearance.
You shall find his vanities forefent
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly.
Shakefp.
The ornaments of conversation, and the outside of fashionable manners, will come in their due time.
Locke.
Created beings see nothing but our outside, and can therefore only frame a judgment of us from our exterior actions.
Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 257.
4. The utmost. A barbarous use.
Two hundred load upon an acre, they reckon the outside of what is to be laid.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
5. Person; external man.
Fortune forbid, my outside have not charm'd her!
Shak.
Your outside promieth as much as can be expected from a gentleman.
Bacon.
What admir'st thou, what transports thee so?
An outside? fair, no doubt, and worthy well
Thy cherishing and thy love.
Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
6. Outer side; part not inclosed.
I threw open the door of my chamber, and found my family standing on the outside.
Speck. N<sup>o</sup>. 577.
TO OUTSIDE. v. a. [out and sit.] To sit beyond the time of any thing.
He that prolongs his meals and sacrifices his time, as well as his other conveniences, to his luxury, how quickly does he outside his pleasure?
South.
TO OUTSLEEP. v. a. [out and sleep.] To sleep beyond.
Lovers, to bed; 'tis almost fairy time:
I fear we shall outsleep the coming morn.
Shakefp.
TO OUTSPEAK. v. a. [out and speak.] To speak something beyond; to exceed.
Rich stuffs and ornaments of household
I find at such proud rate, that it outspeaks
Possession of a subject.
Shakefp. Hen. VIII.
TO OUTSPORT. v. a. [out and sport.] To sport beyond.
Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to outsport discretion.
Shakefp. Othello.
TO OUTSPREAD. v. a. [out and spread.] To extend; to diffuse.
With sails outspread we fly.
Pope.
TO OUTSTAND. v. a. [out and stand.]
1. To support; to resist.
Each could demolish the other's work with ease enough, but not a man of them tolerably defend his own; which was sure never to outstand the first attack that was made.
Woodw.
2. To stand beyond the proper time.
I have outstood my time, which is material
To th' tender of our present.
Shakefp. Cymbeline.
TO OUTSTAND. v. n. To protuberate from the main body.
TO OUTSTARE. v. a. [out and stare.] To face down; to brow-beat; to outface with effrontery.
I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
To win thee, lady.
Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
OUTSTARES. n. f. [out and stare.] Street in the extremities of a town.
TO OUTSTRETCH. v. a. [out and stretch.] To extend; to spread out.
Make him stand upon the mole-hill,
That caught at mountains with out-stretched arms.
Shakefp. Out-

OUT

- Out-stretch'd* he lay, on the cold ground, and oft Curs'd his creation.
Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
A mountain, at whose verdant feet
A spacious plain, out-stretch'd in circuit wide Lay pleasant.
Milt. Par. Reg. b. iii.
Does Theseus burn?
And must not she with out-stretch'd arms receive him?
And with an equal ardour meet his vows?
Smith.
TO OUTSTRIP. v. a. [This word Skinner derives from out and sprintzen, to sprint, German. I know not whether it might not have been originally out-trip, the s being afterward inserted.] To outgo; to leave behind.
If thou wilt out-strip death, go cross the seas,
And live with Richmond from the reach of hell.
Shak.
Do not smile at me, that I boast her off;
For thou shalt find, she will out-strip all praise,
And make it halt behind her.
Shakefp. Tempest.
Thou both their graces in thyself hast more
Out-strip, than they did all that went before.
B. Johnson.
My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will out-strip hers; as bullets powder before
A latter bullet may o'take, the powder being more.
Donne.
A fox may be out-witted, and a hare out-strip.
L'Estrange.
He got the start of them in point of obedience, and thereby out-strip them at length in point of knowledge.
South.
With such array Harpalice bestrode
Her Thracian couster, and out-strip'd the rapid flood.
Dryd.
TO OUT-SWEETEN. v. a. [out and sweeten.] To excel in sweetness.
The leaf of eglantine, which not to flander,
Out-sweeten d not thy breath.
Shakefp. Cymbeline.
TO OUTSWEAR. v. a. [out and swear.] To over-power by swearing.
We shall have old swearing,
But we'll out-face them, and out-swear them too.
Shakefp.
TO OUT-TONGUE. v. a. [out and tongue.] To bear down by noise.
Let him do his spite:
My services which I have done the signory,
Shall out-tongue his complaints.
Shakefp. Othello.
TO OUTTALK. v. a. [out and talk.] To over-power by talk.
This gentleman will out-talk us all.
Shakefp.
TO OUT-VALUE. v. a. [out and value.] To transcend in price.
He gives us in this life an earnest of expected joys, that out-values and transcends all those momentary pleasures it requires us to forsake.
Boyle.
TO OUTVENOM. v. a. [out and venom.] To exceed in poison.
'Tis slander;
Whose edge is sharper than the sword, whose tongue
Out-venoms all the worms of Nile.
Shakefp. Cymbeline.
TO OUTVIE. v. a. [out and vie.] To exceed; to surpass.
For folded flocks, on fruitful plains,
Fair Britain all the world outvies.
Dryden.
The farmers used to make grates to the English merchants, endeavouring sometimes to out-vie one another in such indulgences.
Addison.
One of these petty sovereigns will be still endeavouring to equal the pomp of greater princes, as well as to out-vie those of his own rank.
Addison.
TO OUT-VILLAIN. v. a. [out and villain.] To exceed in villainy.
He hath out-villain'd villainy so far, that the rarity redeems him.
Shakefp. All's well that ends well.
TO OUTVOICE. v. a. [out and voice.] To out-roar; to exceed in clamour.
The English beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys, Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea.
Sha.
TO OUTVOTE. v. a. [out and vote.] To conquer by plurality of suffrages.
They were out-voted by other sects of philosophers, neither for fame, nor number less than themselves.
South.
TO OUTWALK. [out and walk.] To leave one in walking.
OUTWALL. n. f. [out and wall.]
1. Outward part of a building.
2. Superficial appearance.
For confirmation that I am much more Than my out-wall, open this purse and take What it contains.
Shakefp. K. Lear.
OUTWARD. adj. [ut'waird, Saxon.]
1. External; opposed to inward.
If these shews be not outward, which of you
But is four Volscians?
Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Oh what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side!
He took a low'ring leave; but who can tell
What outward hate might inward love conceal?
Dryden.
2. Extrinsec; adventitious.
Princes have their titles for their glories,
An outward honour, for an inward toil.
Shakefp.
Part in peace, and having mourn'd your sin
For outward Eden lost, find paradise within.
Dryden.

OUT

3. Foreign; not intestine.
It was intended to raise an outward war to join with some sedition within doors.
Hayward.
4. Tending to the out-parts.
The fire will force its outward way.
Dryden.
Or, in the prison pent, consume the prey.
5. [In theology.] Carnal; corporeal; not spiritual.
When the soul being inwardly moved to lift itself up by prayer, the outward man is surprized in some other posture; God will rather look to the inward motions of the mind, than to the outward form of the body.
Duppa.
OUTWARD. n. f. External form.
I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.
Shakefp. Cymbeline.
OUTWARD. adv.
1. To foreign parts. As a ship outward bound.
2. To the outer parts.
OUTWARDLY. adv. [from outward.]
1. Externally; opposed to inwardly.
That which inwardly each man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify.
Hooker, b. v. f. 6.
Grieved with disgrace, remaining in their fears:
However seeming outwardly content,
Yet th' inward touch their wounded honour bears.
Daniel.
2. In appearance not sincerely.
Many wicked men are often touched with some inward reverence for that goodness which they cannot be persuaded to practise; nay, which they outwardly seem to despise.
Sprat.
OUTWARDS. adv. Towards the out-parts.
Do not black bodies conceive heat more easily from light than those of other colours do, by reason that the light falling on them is not reflected outwards, but enters the bodies, and is often reflected and refracted within them until it be sifted and lost?
Newton's Opticks.
TO OUTWEAR. v. a. [out and wear.] To pass tediously.
By the stream, if I the night out-wear,
Thus spent already how shall nature bear
The dews descending and nocturnal air.
Pope.
TO OUTWEED. v. a. [out and weed.] To extirpate as a weed.
Wrath is a fire, and jealousy a weed;
The sparks soon quench, the springing weed out-weed,
Spens.
TO OUTWEIGH. v. a. [out and weigh.]
1. To exceed in gravity.
These instruments require so much strength for the supporting of the weight to be moved, as may be equal unto it, besides that other super-added power whereby it is out-weighed and moved.
Wilkins's Math. Mag.
2. To preponderate; to excel in value or influence.
If any think brave death out-weighs bad life,
Let him express his disposition.
Shakefp. Coriolanus.
All your care is for your prince I see,
Your truth to him out-weighs your love to me.
Dryden.
Whenever he finds the hardship of his slavery out-weighs the value of his life, it is in his power, by resisting the will of his master, to draw on himself the death he desires.
Locke.
The marriage of the clergy is attended with the poverty of some of them, which is balanced and out-weighed by many single advantages.
Atterbury.
TO OUTWELL. v. a. [out and well.] To pour out.
As when old father Nilus 'gins to swell,
With timely pride about the Egyptian vale,
His fat'le waves do fertile fline out-well,
And overflow each plain and lowly dale.
Fa. Queen.
TO OUTWIT. v. a. [out and wit.] To cheat; to overcome by stratagem.
A fox may be out-witted, and a hare out-strip.
L'Estrange.
The truer hearted any man is, the more liable he is to be imposed on; and then the world calls it out-witting a man, when he is only out-knaved.
L'Estrange.
Nothing is more equal in justice, and indeed more natural in the direct consequence of effects and causes, than for men wickedly wise to out-wit themselves; and for such as wrestle with providence, to trip up their own heels.
South.
After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself out-witted by Caesar and broke with him.
Dryden.
OUTWORK. n. f. [out and work.] The parts of a fortification next the enemy.
Take care of our out-work, the navy royal, which are the walls of the kingdom; and every great ship is an impregnable fort; and our many safe and commodious ports as the redoubts to secure them.
Bacon.
Death hath taken in the out-works,
And now assails the fort; I feel, I feel him
Gnawing my heart-strings.
Denham.
OUTWORN. part. [from out-wear.] Consumed or destroyed by use.
Better at home lie bed-ridden, idle,
Inglorious, unemployed, with age out-worn.
Milton.

OWN

To OUTWRE'ST. v. a. [out and wrest.] To extort by violence.

The growing anguish

Rankled so fore and fester'd inwardly,

Till that the truth thereof I did out-wrest. Fa. Queen.

OUTWROUGHT. part. [out and wrought.] Out-done; exceeded in efficacy.

In your violent acts,

The fall of torrents and the noise of tempests,

The boiling of Carybdis, the sea's wildness,

The eating force of flames, and wings of winds,

Be all out-wrought by your transcendent furies. B. Johnf.

To OUTWORTH. v. a. [out and worth.] To excel in value.

A beggar's book

Out-worths a noble's blood. Shakefp. Hen. VIII.

To OWE. v. a. [eg aa, I owe, or I ought, Islandick.]

1. To be obliged to pay; to be indebted.

I owe you much, and, like a wife's youth,

That which I owe is lost. Shakefp. Merch. of Ven.

Let none seek needless causes to approve

All your parts of pious duty done,

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son. Dryden.

Thou hast deserv'd more love than I can show,

But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe. Dryden.

If, upon the general balance of trade, English merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thousand pounds, if commodities do not, our money must go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to ascribe; to be obliged for.

By me upheld, that he may know how frail

His fall'n condition is, and to me owe

All his deliverance, and to none but me. Milton.

3. To have from any thing as the consequence of a cause.

O deem thy fall not ow'd to man's decree,

Jove hated Greece, and punish'd Greece in thee. Pope.

4. To possess; to be the right owner of. For owe, which is, in this sense, obsolete, we now use own.

Thou dost here usurp

The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thyself

Upon this island as a spy. Shakefp. Tempest.

Fate, shew thy force; ourselves we do not owe;

What is decreed must be; and be this so. Shakefp.

Not poppy nor mandragora,

Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,

Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep

Which thou ow'd'st yesterday. Shakefp. Othello.

If any happy eye

This roving wanton shall descry

Let the finder surely know

Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe.

The winged wand'rer. Crashaw.

5. A practice has long prevailed among writers, to use owing, the active participle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety Bolton was aware, and, having no quick sense of the force of English words, has used due, in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt. We say, the money is due to me; Bolton says, the effect is due to the cause.

6. Confidential.

This was owing to an indifference to the pleasures of life, and an aversion to the pomps of it. Atterbury.

7. Due as a debt.

You are both too bold;

I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen. Dryden.

The debt, owing from one country to the other, cannot be paid without real effects sent thither to that value. Locke.

8. Imputable to, as an agent.

If we estimate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find in most of them  $\frac{2}{3}$  to be on the account of labour. Locke.

The custom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of struggles between nobles and commons, the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

OWL. n. f. [ule, Saxon; bulote, French and Scottish.] A

OWLET. n. f. [bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,

Lizard's leg, and owl's wing

For a charm. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Return to her!

No! rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse

To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakefp.

'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray

Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd every bay;

Sick was the fun, the owl forsook his bow'r. Dunciad.

OWLER. n. f. One who carries contraband goods. Perhaps from the necessity of carrying on an illicit trade by night.

By running goods, these graceless owlers gain. Swift.

We understand by some owlers, old people die in France.

OWN. n. f. [agen, Saxon; egen, Dutch.]

1. This is a word of no other use than as it is added to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It seems to be a substantive; as, my own, my peculiar: but is, in reality, the participle passive of the verb owe, in the participle own or own: my own; the thing owned by, or belonging to me.

OX

Inachus in his cave alone,

Wept not another's losses, but his own. Dryden.

2. It is added generally by way of emphasis or corroboration.

I yet never was forsworn,

Scarcely have coveted what was my own. Shakefp.

Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2 Kings xvii. 29.

For my own share one beauty I design,

Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dryden.

It is conceit rather than understanding, if it must be under the restraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn,

And knit these gloves made of her own spun yarn. Gay.

Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,

Convinc'd that virtue only is our own. Pope.

3. Sometimes it is added to note opposition or contradiction; domestic; not foreign; mine, his, or yours; not another's.

These toils abroad, these tumults with his own,

Fell in the revolution of one year. Daniel.

There's nothing fillier than a crafty knave out-witted, and beaten at his own play. L'Estrange.

To OWN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own.

When you come, find me out,

And own me for your son. Dryden's Cleomenes.

2. To possess; to claim; to hold by right.

Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;

Nor is your course upon our coasts unknown. Dryden.

Others on earth o'er human race preside,

Of these the chief, the care of nations own,

And guard with arms divine the British throne. Pope.

3. To avow.

I'll venture out alone,

Since you, fair prince, my protection own. Dryden.

4. To confess; not to deny.

Make this truth so evident, that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be ashamed to deny it. Tillotson.

Others will own their weakness of understanding. Locke.

OWNERSHIP. n. f. [from owner.] Property; rightful possession.

In a real action, the proximate cause is the property or ownership of the thing in controversy. Ayliffe's Par.

OWNER. n. f. [from own.] One to whom any thing belongs; master; rightful possessor.

A bark

Stays but till her owner comes aboard. Shakefp.

Is it not enough to break into my garden,

Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,

But thou wilt brave me. Shakefp.

Here shew favour, because it happeneth that the owner hath incurred the forfeiture of eight years profit of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process against him. Bacon.

They intend advantage of my labours,

With no small profit daily to my owners. Milton.

These wait the owners last despair,

And what's permitted to the flames invade. Dryden.

A freehold, though but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleas'd in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 1.

That small muscle draws the nose upwards, when it expresses the contempt which the owner of it has upon seeing any thing he does not like. Addison's Spectator.

Victory hath not made us insolent, nor have we taken advantage to gain any thing beyond the honour of restoring every one's right to their just owners. Atterbury.

What is this wit, which must our cares employ?

The owner's wife, that other men enjoy. Pope.

OWRE. n. f. [urus jubatus, Lat.] A beast. Ainsworth.

OX. n. f. plur. OXEN. [oxa, Saxon; exe, Danish.]

1. The general name for black cattle.

The black ox hath not trod on his foot. Candian.

Sheep run not half so tim'rous from the wolf,

Or horse or oxen from the leopard, Shakefp.

As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.

I saw the river Clitumnus, celebrated by the poets for making cattle white that drink of it. The inhabitants of that country have still the same opinion, and have a great many oxen of a whitish colour to confirm them in it. Addison.

2. A castrated bull.

The horns of oxen and cows are larger than the bulls;

which is caused by abundance of moisture. Bacon.

Although there be naturally more males than females, yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen and weathers, there are fewer. Grant.

The field is spacious I design to sow,

With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.

The

OYE

The frowning bull

And ox half-rai'd. Thomson's Summer.

OXEANE. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

OXEYE. n. f. [Buphtalmus.] The whole face of the plant is like tanfy; the flowers are radiated, and the most part produced simply; the flowers of the disk are separated with an imbricated little leaf. Miller.

OXGANG of Land. n. f. Twenty acres. Ainsworth.

OXHEAL. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

OXFLY. n. f. [ox and fly.] A fly of a particular kind.

OXLEAF. n. f. The same with cowslip; a vernal flower.

A bank whereon the wild thyme blows,

Where oxlip and the nodding violet grows. Shakefp.

OXSTALL. n. f. [ox and stall.] A stand for oxen.

OXTONGUE. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

OXYCRATE. n. f. [oxy and crate, Fr. oxy and κρατ.] A mixture of water and vinegar.

Apply a mixture of the same powder, with a compress press out of oxyerate, and a suitable bandage. Wiseman.

OXMYEL. n. f. [oxy and μυελ, oxy and μελ.] A mixture of vinegar and honey.

In fevers, the ailments prescribed by Hippocrates, were pitans and decoctions of some vegetables, with oxmyel or the mixture of honey and vinegar. Arbuthnot.

OXMYRON. n. f. [oxy and μυρον.] A rhetorical figure, in which an epithet of a quite contrary signification is added to any word. Diels.

Mine is the wag. Crashaw.

OYLETHOLE. n. f. See OYLET. [It may be written oylet, from oylet, French; but oylet seems better.]

Distinguish'd flathes deck the great,

As each excels in birth or state;

His oyletholes are more and ampler,

The king's own body was a famplar. Prior.

OYSTER. n. f. [oyster, Dutch; huître, Fr.] A bivalve testaceous fish.

I will not lend thee a penny—

—Why then the world's mine oyster which I with sword will open. Shakefp. Merr. W. of Wind.

Rich honesty dwells like your miser, fir, in a poor house;

as your pearl in your foul oyster. Shakefp.

Another mafs held a kind of oyster shell, and other bivalves.

Woodward on Fossils.

There may be as many ranks of beings in the invisible world superior to us, as we are superior to all the ranks of being in this visible world; though we descend below the oyster to the least animated atoms discovered by microscopes.

Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

Where oyster tubs in rows

Are rang'd beside the posts, there stay thy haste. Gay.

OYSTERWENCH. n. f. [oyster and wench, or woman.] A

OYSTERWOMAN. n. f. woman whose business is to sell oysters.

Proverbially. A low woman.

P.

PAC

P is a labial consonant, formed by a slight compression of the anterior part of the lips; as, pull, pelt. It is confounded by the Germans and Welsh with b: it has an uniform sound: it is sometimes mute before t; as, account, receipt; but the mute p is in modern orthography commonly omitted.

PABULAR. adj. [pabulum, Lat.] Affording aliment or provender.

PABULATION. n. f. [pabulum, Lat.] The act of feeding or procuring provender.

PABULOUS. adj. [pabulum, Lat.] Alimential; affording aliment.

We doubt the air is the pabulous supply of fire, much less that flame is properly air kindled. Brown's Vulgar Err.

PACE. n. f. [pas, French.]

1. Step; single movement in walking. Behind her death, Close following pace for pace, not mounted yet On his pale horse. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
2. Gait; manner of walk. He himself went but a kind of languishing pace, with his eyes sometimes cast up to heaven, as though his fancies strove to mount higher. Sidney. He saw Menelaus come with heavy pace; Wet were his eyes, and cheerless was his face. Addison.
3. Degree of celerity. To keep pace, is not to be left behind. To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, Creeps in this petty pace from day to day, To the last syllable of recorded time; And all our yesterdays have lighted fools The way to dusty death. Shakespeare's Macbeth. Bring me word How the world goes, that to the pace of it I may spur on my journey. Shakespeare's Coriolanus. His teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness; that his brothers, under the same training, might hold pace with him. Wotton's Buckingham.

The beggar sings ev'n when he sees the place, Befet with thieves, and never mends his pace. Dryden.

Just as much Hudibras, p. i. He mended pace upon the touch. Marcia could answer thee in sighs, keep pace With all thy woes, and count out tear for tear. Addison. Hudibras applied his spur to one side of his horse, as not doubting but the other would keep pace with it. Addison.

4. Step; gradation of business. A gallicism. The first pace necessary for his majesty to make, is to fall into confidence with Spain. Temple.
5. A measure of five feet. The quantity supposed to be measured by the foot from the place where it is taken up to that where it is set down. Measuring land by walking over it, they styled a double step; i. e. the space from the elevation of one foot, to the same foot set down again, mediated by a step of the other foot; a pace equal to five foot; a thousand of which paces made a mile. Holder on Time. The violence of tempests never moves the sea above fix paces deep. Wilkin's Math. Magic.
6. A particular movement which horses are taught, though some have it naturally, made by lifting the legs on the same side together. They rode, but authors having not Determin'd whether pace or trot; That's to say, whether tollutation, As they do term it, or succussion. Hudibras.

TO PACE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To move on slowly. He soft arrived on the grassy plain, And fairly paced forth with easy pain. As we pac'd along Upon the giddy footing of the hatches, Methought, that Glosster stumbld. Shakespeare's R. III. I beheld Crispinus, both in birth and manners vile,

PAC

Pacing in pomp with cloak of Tyrian dye, Chang'd oft a day. Dryden's Juvenal.

The moon rose in the clearest sky I ever saw, by whose solemn light I paced on slowly without interruption. Pope.

The nymph, obedient to divine command, To seek Ulysses, pac'd along the sand. Pope.

2. To move. Remember well, with speed so pace, To speak of Perdita. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
3. [Used of horses.] To move by raising the legs on the same side together. To PACE. v. a.
1. To measure by steps. Where is the horse that doth untread again His tedious measures with th' unbated fire, That he did pace them first. Shakespeare's Merch. of Ven.
2. To direct to go. If you can, pace your wisdom In that good path that I would wish it go, And you shall have your bosom on this wretch. Shakespeare.

PACED. adj. [from pace.] Having a particular gait. Revenge is sure, though sometimes slowly pac'd; Awake, awake, or sleeping sleep thy last. Dryden.

PACER. n. f. [from pace.] He that paces.

PACIFICATION. n. f. [pacificatio, Fr. from pacify.]

1. The act of making peace. He sent forthwith to the French king his chaplain, charging him because he was a churchman, as best sorting with an embassy of pacificatio. Bacon's Hen. VII. David, by an happy and seasonable pacificatio, was took off from acting that bloody tragedy. South.
2. The act of appealing or pacifying. A world was to be saved by a pacificatio of wrath, through the dignity of that sacrifice which should be offered. Hudibras.

PACIFICATOR. n. f. [pacificator, Fr. from pacify.] Peace-maker. He set and kept on foot a continual treaty of peace; besides he had in consideration the bearing the blessed person of a pacificator. Bacon's Henry VII.

PACIFICATORY. adj. [from pacificator.] Tending to make peace.

PACIFIC. adj. [pacificus, Fr. pacificus, Lat.] Peace-making; mild; gentle; appealing. God now in his gracious pacific manner comes to treat with them. Hammond's Fundamentals.

PANCREA'TICK. adj. [from pancreas.] Contained in the pancreas. In man and viviparous quadrupeds, the food moistened with the saliva is first chewed, then swallowed into the stomach, and so evacuated into the intestines, where being mixed with the choler and pancreatick juice, it is further subtilized, and easily finds its way in at the freight orifices of the lacteous veins. Ray on the Creation.

The bile is so acrid, that nature has furnished the pancreatick juice to temper its bitterness. Arbutnot.
PAN'CY. } n. f. [corrupted, I suppose, from panacea, panacea.]
PAN'SY. } A flower: a kind of violet.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead
For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head;
Pancies to please the sight, and cassia sweet to smell. Dryd.
The real essence of gold is as impossible for us to know, as for a blind man to tell in what flower the colour of a panfy is, or is not to be found, whilst he has no idea of the colour of a panfy. Locke.

PANDECT. n. f. [pandecta, Latin.]

1. A treatise that comprehends the whole of any science.
It were to be wished, that the commons would form a entire legislative authority. Swift.

2. The digest of the civil law.

PANDE'CK. adj. [πᾶς and δύσος.] Incident to a whole people.

Those instances bring a consumption, under the notion of a pandemick or endemick, or rather vernacular disease to England. Harvey on Consumptions.

PAN'DER. n. f. [This word is derived from Pandarus, the pimp in the story of Trailus and Cressida; it was therefore originally written pandar, till its etymology was forgotten.] A pimp;
a male bawd; a procurer.

Let him with his cap in hand,
Like a bawd pander, hold the chamber door
Whilst by a slave
His fairest daughter is contaminated. Shakefp. Hen. V.
If thou fear to strike, and to make me certain it is done, thou art the pander to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyal. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

If ever you prove false to one another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be call'd panders after my name. Shakefp. Troil and Cressida.

Camillo was his help in this, his pander,
There is a plot against my life. Shakefp. Wint. Tale.

The sons of happy Punks, the pander's heir,
Are privileged

To clap the first, and rule the theatre. Dryden.

Thou hast confest'd thyself the conscious pandar

Of that pretended passion;

A single witness infamously known,
Against two persons of unquestion'd fame: Dryden.

My obedient honesty was made

The pander to thy lust and black ambition. Rowe.

To PAN'DER. v. a. [from the noun.] To pimp; to be subservient to lust or passion.

Proclaim no shame,
When the compulsive ardour gives the charge,
Since first itself as actively doth burn,
And reason panders will. Shakefp. Hamlet.

PAN'DERLY. adj. [from pander.] Pimping; pimplike.

Oh you panderly rascals! there's a conspiracy against me.

Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

cramp in the muscles. Floyer on the Humours.

PANE. n. f. [paneau, French.]

1. A square of glass.

The letters appear'd reverse thro' the pane,
But in Stella's bright eyes they were plac'd right again. Sw.

The face of Eleanor owes more to that single pane than to all the glasses the ever consulted. Pope's Letters.

2. A piece mixed in variegated works with other pieces.

Him all repute
For his device in handfoming a suit,
To judge of lace, pink, panes, print, and plait,
Of all the court to have the best conceit. Donne.

PANEGY'RICK. n. f. [panegyrique, Fr. πανηγυρικός.] An eulogy; an encomiastick piece.

The Athenians met at the sepulchres of those who were slain at Marathon, and there made panegyrics upon them.

Stillfleet.

That which is a satire to other men must be a panegyrick to your lordship. Dryden.

As he continues the exercises of these eminent virtues, he may be one of the greatest men that our age has bred; and leave materials for a panegyrick, not unworthy the pen of some future Pliny. Prior.

panels of sapphires, set in borders of gold. Bacon.

Maximilian, his whole history is digested into twenty-four square panels of sculpture in bas relief. Addison's Italy.

This fellow will join you together as they join waincoat;
then one of you will prove a shrunk panel, and, like green timber, warp. Shakefp. As you like it.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the panel split. Swift.

He gave the panel to the maid.

2. [Panel, panellum, Lat. of the French, panne, id est, pellis or paneau, a piece or pane in English.] A schedule or roll, containing the names of such jurors, as the sheriff provides to pass upon a trial. And empanelling a jury, is nothing but the entering them into the sheriff's roll or book. Cowd.

Then twelve of such are indifferent, and are returned upon the principal panel, or the tales, are sworn to try the same, according to evidence. Hale's Hist. of England.

PANG. n. f. [either from pain, or bang, Dutch, uncasfy.]

Extreme pain; sudden paroxysm of torment.

he loves the chair of the papacy well, yet he loveth the carpet above the chair. Bacon.

PAPA'L. adj. [papat, French.] Popish; belonging to the pope; annexed to the bishoprick of Rome.

The pope released Philip from the oath, by which he was bound to maintain the privileges of the Netherlands; this papal indulgence hath been the cause of so many hundred thousands slain. Kaleig.

PAPA'W. n. f. [papaya, low Lat. papaya, papayer, Fr.]

The papaw hath a simple stalk; the flowers are male and female in different plants: the male flowers, which are bar-ren, are tubulous, consisting of one leaf, and expand in form of a star: the female flowers consist of several leaves, which expand in form of a rose, out of whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes fleshy fruit, shaped like a cucumber or melon. Miller.

The fair papaw,

Now but a seed, preventing nature's law,
In half the circle of the hasty year,
Projects a shade, and lovely fruits does wear. Waller.

 Such from the text deliver the parabolical exposition of Cajetan. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The whole scheme of these words is figurative, as being a parabolical description of God's vouchsafing to the world the invaluable blessing of the gospel, by the similitude of a king. South's Sermons.
 2. Having the nature or form of a parabola. [from parabola.]
 The pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up a hillock above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure. Ray on the Creation.
 The incident ray will describe, in the refracting medium, the parabolick curve. Chryse's Phil. Prin.
PARABOLICALLY. adv. [from parabolical.]
 1. By way of parable or similitude.
 These words, notwithstanding parabolically intended, admit no literal inference. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 2. In the form of a parabola.
PARABOLISM. n. f. In algebra, the division of the terms of an equation, by a known quantity that is involved or multiplied in the first term. Dié.

P A R

PARABOLOID. n. f. [παράβολον and ειδος.] A paraboloid curve in geometry, whose ordinates are supposed to be in suptruplicate, subquadruplicate, &c. ratio of their respective abscissæ: There is another species; for if you suppose the parameter, multiplied into the square of the abscissa, to be equal to the cube of the ordinate; then the curve is called a femiboloid. Harris.
PARACENTESIS. n. f. [παράκέντησις, parakéntis, to pierce. paracente, Fr.] That operation, whereby any of the venters are perforated to let out any matter; as tapping in a tympany. Quincy.
PARACENTRICAL. } adj. [παρά και κέντρον.] Deviating from PARACENTRICK. } circularity.
 Since the planets move in the elliptick orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and, by a radius from the sun, describe equal areas in equal times, we must find out a law for the paracentrick motion, that may make the orbits elliptic. Cheym.
PARADE. n. f. [parade, Fr.]
 1. Shew; ostentation.
 He is not led forth as to a review, but as to a battle; nor adorned for parade, but execution. Granville.
 The rites perform'd, the parson paid,
 In state returned the grand parade. Swift.
 Be rich; but of your wealth make no parade,
 At least, before your master's debts are paid. Swift.
 2. Military order.
 The cherubim stood arm'd
 To their night-watches in warlike parade. Milton.
 3. Place where troops draw up to do duty and mount guard.
 4. Guard; posture of defence.
 Accustom him to make judgment of men by their inside, which often shows itself in little things, when they are not in parade, and upon their guard. Locke on Education.
PARADIGM. n. f. [παράδειγμα.] Example.
PARADISICAL. adj. [from paradise.] Suited paradise; making paradise.
 The antients expreß the situation of paradisical earth in reference to the sea. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 Such a mediocrity of heat would be so far from exalting the earth to a more happy and paradisical state, that it would turn it to a barren wilderness. Woolst. Nat. Hist.
 The summer is a kind of heaven, when we wander in a paradisical scene, among groves and gardens; but, at this season, we are like our poor first parents, turned out of that agreeable, though solitary life, and forced to look about for more people to help to bear our labours, to get into warmer houses, and live together in cities. Pope.
PARADISE. n. f. [παράδεισος; paradise, Fr.]
 1. The blissful regions, in which the first pair was placed.
 Longer in that paradise to dwell,
 The law I gave to nature him forbids. Milton.
 2. Any place of felicity.
 What fool is not so wise,
 To lose an oath to win a paradise. Shakespeare.
 Consideration, like an angel, comes
 And whipt th' offending Adam out of him;
 Leaving his body as a paradise. Shakespeare.
 T' envelope and contain celestial spirits.
 If ye should lead her into a fool's paradise,
 It were very gross behaviour. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
 Why, nature, bower the spirit of a fiend
 In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh. Shakespeare.
 The earth
 Shall all be paradise, far happier place,
 Than this of Eden, and far happier days. Milton.
PARADOX. n. f. [παράδοξος, Fr. παράδοξος.] A tenet contrary to received opinion; an assertion contrary to appearance; a position in appearance absurd.
 A gloss there is to colour that paradox, and make it appear in shew not to be altogether unreasonable. Hooker.
 You undergo too strict a paradox,
 Striving to make an ugly deed look fair. Shakespeare.
 In their love of God, men can never be too affectionate: it is as true, though it may seem a paradox, that in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes too passionate. Sprat.
PARADOXICAL. adj. [from paradox.]
 1. Having the nature of a paradox.
 What hath been every where opinioned by all men, is more than paradoxical to dispute. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Strange it is, how the curiosity of men, that have been active in the instruction of beasts, among those many paradoxical and unheard-of imitations, should not attempt to make one speak. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 These will seem strange and paradoxical to one that takes a prospect of the world. Norris.
 2. Inclined to new tenets, or notions contrary to received opinions.
PARADOXICALLY. adv. [from paradox.] In a paradoxical manner; in a manner contrary to received opinions.

PARADOXICALNESS. n. f. [from paradox.] State of being, paradoxical.
PARADOXOLOGY. n. f. [from paradox.] The use of paradoxes. Perpend the difficulty, which obscurity, or unavoidable paradoxology, must put upon the attempt. Brown.
PARAGOGE. n. f. [παράγωγη; paragoge, Fr.] A figure whereby a letter or syllable is added at the end of a word, without adding any thing to the sense of it. Dié.
PARAGON. n. f. [paragon, from parage, equality, old French; paragone, Italian.]
 1. A model; a pattern; something supremely excellent.
 An angel! or, if not,
 An earthly paragon. Shakespeare.
 Tunis was never grac'd before with such a paragon to their queen. Shakespeare, Tempest.
 2. Companion; fellow.
 Alone he rode without his paragon. Spenser.
TO PARAGON. v. a. [parangonner, French.]
 1. To compare.
 The picture of Pamela, in little form, he wore in a tablet, purposing to paragon the little one with Arctesia's length, not doubting but even, in that little quantity, the excellency of that would shine through the weakness of the other. Sidney.
 I will give thee bloody teeth,
 If thou with Caesar paragon again. Shakespeare.
 My man of men. Shakespeare.
 Proud seat
 Of Lucifer, so by allusion call'd
 Of that bright star to Satan paragon'd. Milt. Par. Lost.
 2. To equal.
 He hath achiev'd a maid
 That paragons description and wild fame;
 One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens. Shakespeare.
 We will wear our mortal state with her;
 Catharine our queen, before the primest creature
 That's paragon'd i' th' world. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
PARAGRAPH. n. f. [παράγραφον, Fr. παράγραφον.] A distinct part of a discourse.
 Of his last paragraph, I have transcribed the most important parts. Swift.
PARAGRAPHEMATICALLY. adv. [from paragraph.] By paragraphs; with distinct breaks or divisions.
PARALLACTICAL. adj. [from parallax.] Pertaining to a parallax.
PARALLACTICK. } parallax.
PARALLAX. n. f. [παράλλαξις.] The distance between the true and apparent place of the sun, or any star viewed from the surface of the earth.
 By what strange parallax or optick skill
 Of vision multiply'd
 Light moves from the sun to us in about seven or eight minutes time, which distance is about 70,000,000 English miles, supposing the horizontal parallax of the sun to be about twelve seconds. Newton's Optics.
PARALLEL. adj. [παράλληλος; parallel, Fr.]
 1. Extended in the same direction, and preserving always the same distance.
 Distorting the order and theory of causes perpendicular to their effects, he draws them aside unto things whereto they run parallel, and their proper motions would never meet together. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 2. Having the same tendency.
 When honour runs parallel with the laws of God and our country, it cannot be too much cherished; but when the dictates of honour are contrary to those of religion and equity, they are the great deprivations of human nature. Addison.
 3. Continuing the resemblance through many particulars; equal; like.
 The foundation principle of peripateticism is exactly parallel to an acknowledged nothing. Granville.
 I shall observe something parallel to the wooing and wedding suit in the behaviour of persons of figure. Addison.
 Compare the words and phrases in one place of an author, with the same in other places of the same author, which are generally called parallel places. Watts.
PARALLEL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
 1. Lines continuing their course, and still remaining at the same distance from each other.
 Who made the spider parallels design,
 Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line?
 2. Lines on the globe marking the latitude.
 3. Direction conformable to that of another line.
 Diffentions, like small streams, are first begun,
 Scarce seen they rise but gather as they run;
 So lines, that from their parallel decline,
 More they proceed, the more they still disjoin. Garth.
 4. Resemblance; conformity continued through many particulars; likeness.
 Such a resemblance of all parts,
 Life, death, age, fortune, nature, arts;
 She lights her torch at theirs to tell,
 And shew the world this parallel. Denham.
 'Twixt earthly females and the moon,
 All parallels exactly run. Swift's Miscel.

P A R

5. Comparison made.
 The parallel holds in the gainfulness, as well as laboriousness of the work. Decay of Piety.
 A reader cannot be more rationally entertained, than by comparing and drawing a parallel between his own private character, and that of other persons. Addison.
 6. Any thing resembling another.
 Thou ungrateful brute, if thou wouldst find thy parallel, go to hell, which is both the region and the emblem of ingratitude.
 For works like these, let deathless journals tell,
 None but thyself can be thy parallel. Pope.
TO PARALLEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To place, so as always to keep the same direction with another line.
 The Azores having a middle situation between these continents and that vast tract of America, the needle seemeth equally distracted by both, and diverting unto neither, doth parallel and place itself upon the true meridian. Brown.
 2. To keep in the same direction; to level.
 His life is parallel'd.
 Ev'n with the stroke and line of his great justice. Shakespeare.
 3. To correspond to.
 That he stretched out the north over the empty places, seems to parallel the expression of David, he stretched out the earth upon the waters. Burnet.
 4. To be equal to; to resemble through many particulars.
 In the fire, the destruction was so swift, sudden, vast and miserable, as nothing can parallel in story. Dryden.
 5. To compare.
 I parallel'd more than once, our idea of sustance, with the Indian philosopher's he-knew-not-what; which supported the tortoise. Locke.
PARALLELISM. n. f. [parallelisme, Fr. from parallel.] State of being parallel.
 The parallelism and due proportioned inclination of the axis of the earth. More's Divine Dialogues.
 Speaking of the parallelism of the axis of the earth, I demand, whether it be better to have the axis of the earth steady and perpetually parallel to itself, or to have it carelessly tumble this way and that way. Ray on the Creation.
PARALLELOGRAM. n. f. [παράλληλος and γραμμή; parallelogramme, Fr.] In geometry, a right lined quadrilateral figure, whose opposite sides are parallel and equal. Harris.
 The experiment we made in a loadstone of a parallelogram, or long figure, wherein only inverting the extremes, as it came out of the fire, we altered the poles. Brown.
 We may have a clear idea of the area of a parallelogram, without knowing what relation it bears to the area of a triangle. Watts's Logic.
PARALLELOGRAMICAL. adj. [from parallelogram.] Having the properties of a parallelogram.
PARALLELOPIPED. n. f. [from parallelopede, Fr.] A solid figure contained under six parallelograms, the opposites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a prism, whose base is a parallelogram: it is always triple to a pyramid of the same base and height. Harris.
 Two prisms alike in shape I tied so, that their axes and opposite sides being parallel, they compos'd a parallelopede. Newton's Optics.
PARALOGISM. n. f. [παράλογισμος; paralogisme, Fr.] A false argument.
 That because they have not a bladder of gall, like those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism not admissible, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the sun to scatter it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Modern writers, making the drachma less than the denarius, others equal, have been deceived by a double paralogism, in standing too nicely upon the bare words of the ancients, without examining the things. Arbutnot.
 If a syllogism agree with the rules given for the construction of it, it is called a true argument: if it disagree with these rules, it is a paralogism, or false argument. Watts.
PARALOGY. n. f. False reasoning.
 That Methuselah was the longest liver of all the posterity of Adam, we quietly believe; but that he must needs be so, is perhaps below paralogy to deny. Brown.
PARALYSIS. [παράλυσις; paralyse, Fr.] A palsy.
PARALYTICAL. } adj. [from paralysis; paralytique, Fr.] Pal.
PARALYTICK. } tied; inclined to palsy.
 Nought shall it profit, that the charming fair, Angelic, softest work of heav'n, draws near
 To the cold shaking paralytick hand, Senseless of beauty. Priser.
 If a nerve be cut, or streightly bound, that goes to any muscle, that muscle shall immediately lose its motion; which is the case of paralyticks. Derham.
 The difficulties of breathing and swallowing, without any tumour after long diseases, proceed commonly from a resolution or paralytical disposition of the parts. Arbutnot.
PARAMETER.

PAR

PARAMETER. n. f. The latus rectum of a parabola, is a third proportional to the abscissa and any ordinate; so that the square of the ordinate is always equal to the rectangle under the parameter and abscissa: but, in the ellipsis and hyperbola, it has a different proportion. Harris.

PARAMOUNT. adj. [per and mount.]

1. Superiour; having the highest jurisdiction; as lord paramount, the chief of the feignory.

Leagues within the state are ever pernicious to monarchies; for they raise an obligation, paramount to obligation of sovereignty, and make the king, tanquam unus ex nobis. Bacon.

The dogmatist's opinioned assurance is paramount to argument. Glanville.

If all power be derived from Adam, by divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government; and therefore the positive laws of men cannot determine that which is itself the foundation of all law. Locke.

Mankind, seeing the apostles possessed of a power plainly paramount to the powers of all the known beings, whether angels or demons, could not question their being inspired by God. West on the Resurrection.

2. Eminent; of the highest order.

John a Chamber was hanged upon a gibbet raised a stage higher in the midst of a square gallows, as a traitor paramount; and a number of his chief accomplices were hanged upon the lower story round him. Bacon.

PARAMOUNT. n. f. The chief.

In order came the grand infernal peers,
'Midst came their mighty paramount. Milton's P. L.

PARAMOUR. n. f. [par and amour, Fr.]

1. A lover or wooer.

Upon the floor
A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,
Court of many a jolly paramour,
The which them did in modestly amate,
And each one fought his lady to aggrate. Fa. Queen.

No season then for her
To wanton with the sun her lusty paramour. Milt.

2. A mistress. It is obsolete in both senses, though not inelegant or unmusical.

Shall I believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous,
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps Thee here in dark to be his paramour. Shakespeare.

PARANYPH. n. f. [παρά and νύμφη, paranymph, Fr.]

1. A bride-man; one who leads the bride to her marriage.

The Timian bride
Had not so soon prefer'd
Thy paranymph, worthles to thee compar'd, Successor in thy bed. Milton's Agonistes.

2. One who countenances or supports another.

Sin hath got a paranymph and a solicitor, a warrant and an advocate. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

PARAPHEM. n. f. [παρά and φημι, paraphem, Fr.] A brazen table fixed to a pillar, on which laws and proclamations were anciently engraved: also a table set up publicly, containing an account of the rising and setting of the stars, eclipses of the sun and moon, the seasons of the year, &c. whence astrologers give this name to the tables, on which they draw figures according to their art. Philips.

Our forefathers, observing the course of the sun, and marking certain mutations to happen in his progress through the zodiac, set them down in their parapegmis, or astronomical canons. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PARAPET. n. f. [parapet, Fr. parapetto, Italian.] A wall breast high.

There was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth to restrain the petulance of our words. Ben Jonson.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [παρά and φρασις, paraphrase, Fr.] A loose interpretation; an explanation in many words.

All the laws of nations were but a paraphrase upon this standing rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itself into suitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occasions. South's Sermons.

In paraphrase, or translation with latitude, the author's words are not so strictly followed as his sense, and that too amplified, but not altered: such is Mr. Waller's translation of Virgil's fourth Æneid. Dryden.

TO PARAPHRASE. v. a. [paraphrase, Fr. παράφραζεω.] To interpret with laxity of expression; to translate loosely.

We are put to construe and paraphrase our own words, to free ourselves from the ignorance and malice of our adversaries. Stillington's Def. of Dis. on Romish Idolatry.

What needs he paraphrase on what we mean, Dryden.

We were at worst but wanton; he's obscene.

Where translation is impracticable, they may paraphrase. — But it is intolerable, that under a pretence of paraphrasing and translating, a way should be suffered of treating authors to a manifest disadvantage. Fulton on the Classics.

PARAPHRASIS. n. f. [paraphrase, Fr. παράφρασις.] A lax interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The fittest for public audience are such, as following a middle course between the rigor of literal translators and the liberty of paraphrasis, do, with great shortness and plainness, deliver the meaning. Hooker.

The chaldean paraphrase renders Gerah by Meath. Arbut.

PARAPHRASIS. n. f. [from paraphrase, Fr.] Lax in interpretation; not literal; not verbal.

PARAPHRENTIS. n. f. [παρά and φρενις, paraphrensis, Fr.] Paraphrenitis is an inflammation of the diaphragm. The symptoms are a violent fever, a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbut.

PARASANG. n. f. [parasang, low Latin.] A Persian measure of length.

Since the mind is not able to frame an idea of any space without parts, instead thereof it makes use of the common measures, which, by familiar use, in each country, have imprinted themselves on the memory; as inches and feet, or cubits and parasangs. Locke.

PARASITE. n. f. [parasite, Fr. parasite, Latin.] One that frequents rich tables, and earns his welcome by flattery.

He is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hopes linger. Shakespeare.

Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears,
You fools of fortune. Shakespeare.

Come, you parasite, answer me Directly to this question. Shakespeare.

Diogenes, when mice came about him, as he was eating, said, I see, that even Diogenes nourisheth parasites. Bacon.

Thou, with trembling fear,
Or like a fawning parasite, obeyed;
Then to thyself ascrib'd the truth foretold. Milton.

The people sweat not for their king's delight,
To enrich a pimp, or raise a parasite. Dryden.

PARASITICAL. adj. [parasitic, Fr. from parasite.] Flat-

TO PARBOIL. v. a. [parboiler, French.] To half boil; to boil in part.

Parboil two large capons upon a soft fire, by the space of an hour, till, in effect, all the blood be gone. Bacon.

From the sea into the ship we turn,
Like parboil'd wretches, on the coals to burn. Donne.

Like the scum, starved men did draw,
From parboil'd shoes and boots. Donne.

TO PARBREAK. v. n. [brecker, Dutch.] To vomit.

PARBREAK. n. f. [from the verb.] Vomit.

Her filthy parbreak all the place defiled has. Fa. Queen.

PARCEL. n. f. parcella, French; particula, Latin.]

1. A small bundle.

2. A part of the whole taken separately.

Women, Silvius, had they mark'd him
In parcels, as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him. Shakespeare.

I drew from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate;
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively. Shakespeare's Othello.

An inventory thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Shakespeare.

Rich stuffs and ornaments of household.
I have known pensions given to particular persons, any one of which, if divided into smaller parcels, and distributed to those, who distinguish themselves by wit or learning, would answer the end. Swift.

The same experiments succeed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows somewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. A quantity or mass.

What can be rationally conceived in so transparent a substance as water for the production of these colours, besides the various sizes of its fluid and globular parcels. Newton.

4. A number of persons, in contempt.

This youthful parcel
Of noble batchelors stand at my bestowing. Shakespeare.

PAR

5. Any number or quantity in contempt.

They came to this conclusion; that, unless they could, by a parcel of fair words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. Le Strange.

TO PARCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out several perfections to several deities, do they not, by this, assert contradictions, making deity only to such a measure perfect; whereas a deity implies perfection beyond all measure. South's Sermons.

Those ghostly kings would parcel out my pow'r,
And all the fatness of my land devour. Dryden.

2. To make up into a mass.

What a wounding shame,
That mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Shakespeare.

PARCENER. n. f. [In common law.] When one dies possessed of an estate, and having issue only daughters, or his sisters be his heirs; so that the lands descend to those daughters or sisters: these are called parceners, and are but as one heir. Di.

PARCENERY. n. f. [from parcener, French.] A holding or occupancy of land by more persons pro indiviso, or by joint tenants, otherwise called coparceners: for if they refuse to divide their common inheritance, and chuse rather to hold it jointly, they are said to hold in parcenary. Cowel.

TO PARCHE. v. a. [from parcher, Fr.] To parch, to burn, to scorch; perhaps from parcher, burnt, to parch, to parch; perhaps from parcher, the effect of fire upon parchment being almost proverbial.] To burn slightly and superficially; to scorch; to dry up.

Hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall. Shakespeare.

Did he so often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milt. Par. Lost.

I'm stupify'd with sorrow, past relief
Of tears; parch'd up and wither'd with my grief. Dryden.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemisphere would be condemn'd to perpetual cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parched by the sun beams. Ray.

The Syrian star
With his sultry breath infects the sky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us fry. Dryden's Horace.

Full fifty years
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the feverish heats of parching summer. Rosce.

He is like a man distressed with thirst in the parched places of the wilderness, he searches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers's Sermons.

TO PARCH. v. n. To be scorched.

We were better parch in Affric sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes. Shakespeare.

If to prevent the acrospiring, it be thrown thin, many corns will dry and parch into barley. Mort. Hubb.

PARCHMENT. n. f. [parchemin, French; pergamena, Latin.] Skins dressed for the writer. Among traders, the skins of sheep are called parchment; that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as fresh as if newly written, being written in parchment, and covered with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying shades before the clouds we shew,
We shrink like parchment in consuming flame. Dryden.

PARCHMENT-MAKER. n. f. [parchment and maker.] He who dresses parchment.

PARD. n. f. pardus, paradisi, Latin.] The leopard;

PARDAL. n. f. in poetry, any of the spotted beasts.

The pardal swift, and the tyger cruel. Fa. Queen.

As fox to lambs, as bulk to heifer's calf;
As pard to the hind, or step-dame to her son. Shakespeare.

Ten brace of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair,
A match for pards in sight, in grappling for the bear. Dryden.

TO PARDON. v. a. [pardonner, French.]

PAR

2. Forgiveness of a crime; indulgence.

He that pleaseth great men, shall get pardon for iniquity. Eccles. xx. 27.

A slight pamphlet, about the elements of architecture, hath been entertained with some pardon among my friends. Wotton.

3. Remission of penalty.

4. Forgiveness received.

A man may be safe as to his condition, but, in the mean time, dark and doubtful as to his apprehensions; secure in his pardon, but miserable in the ignorance of it; and so passing all his days in the disconsolate, uneasy vicissitudes of hopes and fears, at length go out of the world, not knowing whither he goes. South's Sermons.

5. Warrant of forgiveness, or exemption from punishment.

The battle done, and they within our power, Shall never see his pardon. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

PARDONABLE. adj. [pardonable, Fr. from pardon.] Venial; excusable.

That which we do being evil, is notwithstanding by so much more pardonable, by how much the exigencies of so doing, or the difficulty of doing otherwise is greater, unless this necessity or difficulty have originally risen from ourselves. Hooker.

A blind man sitting in the chimney corner is pardonable enough, but sitting at the helm, he is intolerable. South.

What English readers, unacquainted with Greek or Latin, will believe me, when we confess we derive all that is pardonable in us from ancient fountains. Dryden.

PARDONABLENESS. n. f. [from pardonable.] Venialness; susceptibility of pardon.

Saint John's word is, all sin is transgression of the law; Saint Paul's, the wages of sin is death: put these two together, and this conceit of the natural pardonableness of sin vanishes away. Hall.

PARDONABLY. adv. [from pardonable.] Venially; excusably.

I may judge when I write more or less pardonably. Dryden.

PARDONER. n. f. [from pardon.]

1. One who forgives another.

This is his pardon, purchas'd by such sin,
For which the pardoner himself is in. Shakespeare.

2. Fellows that carried about the pope's indulgences, and sold them to such as would buy them, against whom Luther incensed the people of Germany. Cowel.

TO PARE. v. a. [This word is reasonably deduced by Skinner from the French phrase, parer les ongles, to dress the horse's hoofs when they are shaved by the farrier: thus we first said, pare your nails; and from thence transferred the word to general use.] To cut off extremities or the surface; to cut away by little and little; to diminish.

The creed of Athanasius, and that sacred hymn of glory, than which nothing doth sound more heavenly in the ears of faithful men, are now reckoned as superfluities, which we must in any case pare away, lest we cloy God with too much service. Hooker.

I have not alone
Impley'd you where high profits might come home;
But par'd my present havings to bestow
My bounties upon you. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

I am a man, whom fortune hath cruelly scratch'd.
'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Shakespeare.

The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely paws all par'd away. Shakespeare.

The king began to pare a little the privilege of clergy, ordaining that clerks convicted, should be burned in the hand. Bacon's Henry VII.

Pick out of tales the mirth, but not the sin.
He pares his apple, that will cleanly feed. Herbert.

Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must first look into his own, he must pare off whatsoever is amiss, and not without holiness approach to the holiest of all holies. Taylor.

All the mountains were pared off the earth, and the surface of it lay even, or in an equal convexity every where with the surface of the sea. Burnet.

The most poetical parts, which are description and images, were to be pared away, when the body was swollen into too large a bulk for the representation of the stage. Dryden.

The sword, as it was justly drawn by us, so can it scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be so far pared and reduced, as that we may be under no apprehensions. Atterbury.

'Twere well if she would pare her nails. Pope.

PAREGORICK. adj. [παρηγορητικός.] Having the power in medicine to comfort, mollify and assuage. Di.

PARENCHYMA. n. f. [παρηνχυμα.] A spongy or porous substance; in physics, a part through which the blood is strained for its better fermentation and perfection. Di.

PARENCHYMATOUS. adj. [from parenchyma.] Relating to PARENCHYMOUS. the parenchyma; spongy.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant, hart's-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper corn. Now the covers and true body of each seed, the parenchymatous and ligneous parts of both moderately multiplied, afford an hundred thousand millions of formed atoms in the space of a pepper corn. Grew.

Those parts, formerly reckoned parenchymatous, are now found to be bundle of exceedingly small threads. Cheyne.
PARENESIS. n. f. [παραινέσις,] Persuasion. Diët.
PARENT. n. f. [parent, Fr. parents, Latin.] A father or mother.
 All true virtues are to honour true religion as their parent, and all well-ordered commonweals to love her as their chiefest stay. Hooker.
 As a publick parent of the state,
 My justice, and thy crime, requires thy fate. Dryden.
 In vain on the dissembl'd mother's tongue
 Had cunning art, and fly persuasion hung;
 And real care in vain and native love
 In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.
PARENTAGE. n. f. [parentage, Fr. from parent.] Extraction; birth; condition with respect to the rank of parents.
 A gentleman of noble parentage,
 Of fair demeanour, youthful and nobly allied. Shakeſp.
 Though men esteem thee low of parentage,
 Thy father is th' eternal king. Milt. Par. Reg.
 To his levee go,
 And from himself your parentage may know. Dryden.
 We find him, not only boasting of his parentage, as an Israelite at large, but particularizing his descent from Benjamin. Atterbury's Sermons.
PARENTAL. adj. [from parent.] Becoming parents; pertaining to parents.
 It overthrows the careful course and parental provision of nature, whereby the young ones newly excluded, are sustained by the dam. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 These eggs hatched by the warmth of the sun into little worms, feed without any need of parental care. Derham.
 Young ladies, on whom parental controul fits heavily, give a man of intrigue room to think, that they want to be parents. Clarissa.
PARENTATION. n. f. [from parents, Latin.] Something done or said in honour of the dead.
PARENTHESIS. n. f. [parenthese, Fr. παρεσις, and τίθημι.] A sentence so included in another sentence, as that it may be taken out, without injuring the sense of that which incloses it: being commonly marked thus, ( ).
 In vain is my person excepted by a parenthesis of words, when so many hands are armed against me with swords. King Charles.
 In his Indian relations, are contained strange and incredible accounts; he is seldom mentioned, without a derogatory parenthesis in any author. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Thou shalt be seen,
 Tho' with some short parenthesis between,
 High on the throne of wit. Dryden.
 Don't suffer every occasional thought to carry you away into a long parenthesis, and thus stretch out your discourse, and divert you from the point in hand. Watts's Logic.
PARENTHETICAL. adj. [from parenthesis.] Pertaining to a parenthesis.
PARER. n. f. [from pare.] An instrument to cut away the surface.
 A hone and a parer, like sole of a boot,
 To pare away grasse, and to raise up the root. Tusser.
PARGERGY. n. f. [παρεργία and εργον.] Something unimportant; something done by the by.
 The scripture being serious, and commonly omitting such parergies, it will be unreasonable to condemn all laughter. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PARGET. n. f. Plaster laid upon roofs of rooms.
 Gold was the parget, and the cieling bright
 Did shine all scaly with great plates of gold;
 The floor with jasp and emerald was dight. Spenser.
 Of English talc, the coarser sort is called plaster or parget; the finer, spadd. Woodward.
TO PARGET. v. a. [from the noun.] To plaster; to cover with plaster.
 There are not more arts of disguising our corporeal blemishes than our moral; and yet, whilst we thus paint and parget our own deformities, we cannot allow any the least imperfection of another's to remain undetected. Government of the Tongue.
PARGETER. n. f. [from parget.] A plasterer.
PARHELION. n. f. [παρελιον and ήλιος.] A mock sun.
 To neglect that supreme reſplendency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it, that we so doat on in the creature, is as absurd, as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion, instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.
PARIETAL. adj. [from paries, Latin.] Constituting the sides or walls.
 The lower part of the parietal and upper part of the temporal bones were fractured. Sharp's Surgery.
PARIETARY. n. f. [parietaire, Fr. paries, Lat.] An herb. Ainsl.
PARING. n. f. [from pare.] That which is pared off any thing; the rind.
 Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese; and consumes itself to the very paring. Shakeſpeare.

P A R

To his guest, tho' no way sparing,
 He eat himself the rind and paring. Pope.
 In May, after rain, pare off the surface of the earth, and with the parings raise your hills high, and enlarge their breadth. Mortimer's Husbandry.
PARIS. n. f. An herb.
PARISH. n. f. [parochia, low Lat. parroisse, Fr. of the Greek παροικία, i. e. accolarum conventus, acclatus, sacra vicinia.] The particular charge of a secular priest. Every church is either cathedral, conventual, or parochial: cathedral is that, where there is a bishop seated, so called a cathedra: conventual confists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other college of spiritual men: parochial is that which is instituted for saying divine service, and administering the holy sacraments to the people, dwelling within a certain compass of ground near unto it. Our realm was first divided into parishes by Honorius, archbishop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 636. Cowel.
 Dametas came piping and dancing, the merriest man in a parish. Sidney.
 The tithes, his parish freely paid, he took;
 But never fud, or curs'd with bell or book. Dryd.
PARISH. adj.
 1. Belonging to the parish; having the care of the parish.
 A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
 An awful, reverend and religious man. Dryden.
 Not parish clerk, who calls the psalm so clear. Gay.
 The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of his interment.
 A man, after his natural death, was not capable of the least parish office. Atterbury and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
 2. Maintained by the parish.
 The ghost and the parish girl are entire new characters. Gay.
PARISHIONER. n. f. [parroissien, Fr. from parish.] One that belongs to the parish.
 I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutor'd by you. Shakeſpeare.
 Hail bishop Valentine, whose day this is,
 All the air is thy diocese;
 And all the chirping choiristers,
 And other birds are thy parishioners. Domet.
 In the greater out-parishes, many of the parishioners, thro' neglect, do perish. Grant.
 I have deposited thirty marks, to be distributed among the poor parishioners. Addison's Spectator.
PARROR. n. f. [for apparitor.] A beadle; a summoner of the courts of civil law.
 You shall be summon'd by an host of parrours; you shall be sentenced in the spiritual court. Dryden.
PARRITY. n. f. [paritas, Fr. paritas, Lat.] Equality; resemblance.
 We may here justly tax the dishonesty and shamefulness of the mouths, who have upbraided us with the opinion of a certain stoical parity of sins. Hall.
 That Christ or his apostles ever commanded to set up such a parity of presbyters, and in such a way as those Scots endeavour, I think is not very disputable. K. Charles.
 Survey the total set of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of procreation, observe an equality of length and parity of numeration; that is, not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one side not exactly answered by the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Those accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the discovery of such an invention, might fall in with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hall.
 Their agreement, in essential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glover.
 Women could not live in that parity and equality of experience with their husbands, as now they do. Grant.
 By an exact parity of reason, we may argue, if a man has no sense of those kindnesses that pass upon him, from one like himself, whom he sees and knows, how much less shall his heart be affected with the grateful sense of his favours, whom he converses with only by imperfect speculations, by the discourses of reason, or the discoveries of faith. South's Sermons.
 By parity of reason, we must expect a peace so much worse about two years hence. Swift's Miscellanies.
PARK. n. f. [peapue, Sax. para, Fr.] A piece of ground inclosed and stored with wild beasts of chase, which a man may have by prescription or the king's grant. Manwood, in his forest-laws, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beasts of venery, and also for other wild beasts, that are beasts of the forest and of the chase: and those wild beasts are to have a firm peace and protection there, so that no man may hurt or chase them within the park, without license of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chase or a warden; for a park must be inclosed, and may not lie open; if it does, it is a good cause of seizure into the king's hands: and the owner cannot have action against such as hunt in his park, if it lies open.
 We have parks and inclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds, which we use not only for view or rareness, but likewise for dissections and trials. Bacon.
 To PARK.

P A R

TO PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose as in a park.
 How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
 A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
 Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakeſp.
PARKER. n. f. [from park.] A park-keeper. Ainsworth.
PARKLEAVES. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
PARLE. n. f. [from parler, French.] Conversation; talk; oral treaty; oral discussion of any thing.
 Of all the gentlemen,
 That every day with parle encounter me,
 In thy opinion, which is worthiest love. Shakeſp.
 Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shakeſp.
 The bishop, by a parle, is, with a show
 Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.
 Why meet we thus like wrangling advocates,
 To urge the justice of our cause with words?
 I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we must meet,
 Give me my arms. Rowe's Ambitious Step-mother.
TO PARLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.] To treat by word of mouth; to talk; to discuss any thing orally. It is much used in war, for a meeting of enemies to talk.
 A Turk desired the captain to send some, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
 He parleys with her a while, as imagining she would advise him to proceed. Broome.
PARLEY. n. f. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; discussion by word of mouth.
 Seek rather by parley, to recover them than by the sword. Sid.
 Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley:
 A rotten case abides no handling. Shakeſp.
 In such a parley should I answer thee. Shakeſp.
 Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shakeſp.
 Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lusts, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Calamy.
 No gentle means could be essay'd;
 'Twas beyond parley when the siege was laid. Dryden.
 Force, never yet a generous heart did gain;
 We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain. Dryden.
 Yet when some better fated youth
 Shall with his am'rous parley move thee, Reflect one moment on his truth,
 Who dying thus, perishes to love thee. Prior.
PARLIAMENT. n. f. [parliamentum, low Lat. parlement, Fr.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely, the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the common wealth, especially the making and correcting of laws; which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Cowel.
 The king is fled to London,
 To call a present court of parliament. Shakeſp.
 Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
 To make a shambles of the parliament house. Shakeſp.
 The true use of parliaments is very excellent; and be often called, and continued as long as is necessary. Bacon.
 I thought the right way of parliaments, the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people. King Charles.
 These are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial stood for parliament-men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.
PARLIAMENTARY. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; suiting the parliament; pertaining to parliament.
 To the three first titles of the two houses, or lines, and conquests, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.
 Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or constitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.
 Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary security; I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.
PARLOUR. n. f. [parloir, French; parlatorio, Italian.]
 1. A room in monasteries, where the religious meet and converse.
 2. A room in houses on the first floor, elegantly furnished for reception or entertainment.
 Can we judge it a thing seemly, for a man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use. Hooker.
 Back again fair Alma led them right,
 And soon into a goodly parlour brought. Fa. Queen.
 It would be infinitely more shameful, in the drefs of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.
 Roof and sides were like a parlour made,
 A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.
PARLOUS. adj. [This might seem to come from parler, Fr. to speak; but Juvénal derives it, I think, rightly, from parilous, in which sense it answers to the Latin improbus.] Keen; sprightly; waggish.
 Midas durst communicate
 To none but to his wife his ears of state;
 One must be trusted, and he thought her fit,
 As passing prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.
PARLOUSNESS. n. f. [from parlous.] Quickness; keenness of temper.

P A R

PARMA-CITTY. n. f. Corruptedly for sperma ceti. Ainsl.
PARNEL. n. f. [the diminutive of petronella.] A punk; a slut. Obsolete. Skinner.
PAROCHIAL. adj. [parochialis, from parochia, low Lat.] Belonging to a parish.
 The married state of parochial pastors hath given them the opportunity of setting a more exact and universal pattern of holy living, to the people committed to their charge. Atterbury.
PARODY. n. f. [parodie, Fr. παροδια.] A kind of writing, in which the words of an author or his thoughts are taken, and by a slight change adapted to some new purpose.
 The imitations of the ancients are added together with some of the parodies and allusions to the most excellent of the moderns. Pope's Dunciad.
TO PARODY. v. a. [parodier, Fr. from parody.] To copy by way of parody.
 I have translated, or rather parodied, a poem of Horace, in which I introduce you advising me. Pope.
PARONYMOUS. adj. [παρωνυμους.] Resembling another word. Shew your critical learning in the etymology of terms, the synonymous and the paronymous or kindred names. Watts.
PAROLE. n. f. [parole, French.] Word given as an assurance; promise given by a prisoner not to go away.
 Love's votaries enthrall each others soul,
 'Till both of them live but upon parole. Cleaveland.
 Be very tender of your honour, and not fall in love; because I have a scruple, whether you can keep your parole, if you become a prisoner to the ladies. Swift.
PARONOMA'SIA. n. f. [παρωνομασία.] A rhetorical figure, in which, by the change of a letter or syllable, several things are alluded to. It is called, in Latin, agnominatio. Diët.
PAROQUET. n. f. [parroquet or perroquet, French.] A small species of parrot.
 The great, red and blue, are parrots; the middlemost, called popinjays; and the lesser, parroquets: in all above twenty forts. Grew.
 I would not give my parroquet
 For all the doves that ever flew. Prior.
PARONNY'CHIA. n. f. [παρωνυχία; paronychie, Fr.] A preternatural swelling or sore under the root of the nail in one's finger; a felon; a whitlow. Diët.
PAROTID. adj. [parotide, Fr. παροτίς, παρεξ and ωτις.] Salivary; so named because near the ears.
 Beasts and birds, having one common use of spittle, are furnished with the parotid glands, which help to supply the mouth with it. Grew.
PAROTIS. n. f. [παροτίς.] A tumour in the glandules behind and about the ears, generally called the emunctories of the brain; though, indeed, they are the external fountains of the saliva of the mouth. Wifeman.
PAROXYSM. [παροξυσμός; paroxysme, Fr.] A fit; periodical exacerbation of a disease.
 I fancied to myself a kind of case, in the change of the paroxysm. Dryden.
 Amorous girls, through the fury of an hysterical paroxysm, are cast into a trance for an hour. Harvey.
 The greater distance of time there is between the paroxysms, the fever is less dangerous, but more obstinate. Arbuthnot.
PARRICIDE. n. f. [parricide, Fr. parricida, Latin.]
 1. One who destroys his father.
 I told him the revenging gods
 'Gainst parricides did all the thunder bend, Spoke with how manifold and strong a bond
 The child was bound to th' father. Shakeſp.
 2. One who destroys or invades any to whom he owes particular reverence; as his country or patron.
 3. [Parricide, Fr. parricidium, Lat.] The murder of a father; murder of one to whom reverence is due.
 Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and likewise a good law-maker; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon.
 Morat was always bloody, now he's bafe;
 And has so far in usurpation gone,
 He will by parricide secure the throne. Dryden.
PARRICIDAL. adj. [from parricida, Latin.] Relating to parricide; committing parricide.
 He is now paid in his own way, the parricidous animal, and punishment of murderers is upon him. Brown.
PARRROT. n. f. [perroquet, French.] A particoloured bird of the species of the hooked bill, remarkable for the exact imitation of the human voice.
 Some will ever more peep thro' their eyes,
 And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakeſp.
 Who taught the parrot human notes to try?
 'Twas witty want, fierce hunger to appease. Dryden.
 The great, red and blue, parrot: of these, the middlemost are called popinjays; and the lesser, parroquets: in all above twenty forts. Grew.
TO PARRY. v. n. [parer, French.] To put by thrusts; to fence.
 A man of courage, who cannot fence, and will put all upon one thrust, and not stand parrying, has the odds against a moderate fencer. Locke.
 could

PAR

I could
By dint of logic strike thee mute;
With learned skill, now push, now parry,
From Dari to Bocardo vary. Prior.
TO PARSE. v. a. [from pars, Latin.] To resolve a sentence into the elements or parts of speech. It is a word only used in grammar schools.
Let him construe the letter into English, and parse it over perfectly. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
Let scholars reduce the words to their original, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs, and give an account of their formations and changes, their syntax and dependencies, which is called parfing. Wait's Improv. of the Mind.
PARSIMONIOUS. adj. [from parsimony.] Covetous; frugal; sparing. It is sometimes of a good, sometimes of a bad sense.
A prodigal king is nearer a tyrant, than a parsimonious; for store at home draweth not his contemplations abroad, but want supplieth itself of what is next. Bacon.
Extraordinary funds for one campaign may spare us the expence of many years, whereas a long parsimonious war will drain us of more men and money. Addison.
PARSIMONIOUSLY. adv. [from parsimonious.] Covetously; frugally; sparingly.
Our ancestors acted parsimoniously, because they only spent their own treasure for the good of their posterity; whereas we squandered away the treasures of our posterity. Swift.
PARSIMONIOUSNESS. n. f. [from parsimonious.] A disposition to spare and save.
PARSIMONY. n. f. [from parsimonious, Latin.] Frugality; cov-etousness; niggardliness; saving temper.
The ways to enrich, are many: parsimony is one of the best, and yet is not innocent; for it withholdeth men from works of liberality. Bacon.
These people, by their extreme parsimony, soon grow into wealth from the smallest beginnings. Swift.
PARSLEY. n. f. [persil, Fr. apium, Lat. persil, Welsh.] The leaves are divided into wings, growing upon a branched rib, and for the most part cut into small segments: the petals of the flowers are whole and equal, each flower being succeeded by two gibbous channelled seeds.
A wench married in the afternoon, as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit. Shakespeare.
Green beds of parsley near the river grow.
Sempronius dug Titus out of the parsley-bed, as they use to tell children, and thereby became his mother. Locke.
PARSNIP. n. f. [pastinaca, Latin.] A plant with rose and um-bellated flowers, consisting of many petals or leaves placed orbicularly, and resting on the empalement, which turns to a fruit composed of two seeds, which are oval, and generally casting off their cover; to which you may add, that the leaves are winged and large. Miller.
November is drawn in a garment of changeable green, and black bunches of parfneps and turneps in his right hand.
Peacocks on Blazoning.
PARSON. n. f. [Derived either from parson in ecclesia sustinet; or from parvo-
cheamus, the parish priest.]
1. The priest of a parish; one that has a parochial charge or cure of souls.
Abbot was preferred by king James to the bishoprick of Coventry and Litchfield, before he had been parson, vicar or curate of any parish church. Clarendon.
2. A clergyman.

heritance in the son of Jesse. 2 Samuel xx. 1.
The ungodly made a covenant with death, because they are worthy to take part with it. Wisdom i. 16.
Agamemnon provokes Apollo, whom he was willing to appease afterwards at the cost of Achilles, who had no part in his fault. Pope.
5. Side; party.
Michael Caffio,
When I have spoken of you dispraisingly,
Hath ta'en your part. Shakespeare.
And that he might on many props repose,
He strengths his own, and who his part did take. Daniel.
Let not thy divine heart
Forethink me any ill,
Destiny may take thy part,
And may thy tears fulfill. Dante.
Some other pow'r
Might have aspir'd, and me tho' mean Drawn to his part. Milton.
Call up their eyes, and fix them on your example; that so natural ambition might take part with reason and their interest to encourage imitation. Clarville.
A brand preserv'd to warm some prince's heart,
And make whole kingdoms take her brother's part. Waller.
The arm thus waits upon the heart,
So quick to take the bully's part;
That once, tho' warm, decides more flow,
Than t' other executes the blow. Prior.
6. Something relating or belonging.
For Zelmane's part, she would have been glad of the fall, which made her bear the sweet burden of Philoclea, but that she feared the might receive some hurt. Sidney.
For my part, I would entertain the legend of my love, with quiet hours. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
For your part, it not appears to me,
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief upon. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
For my part, I have no servile end in my labour, which may restrain or enslave the freedom of my poor judgment. Wotton.
For my part, I think there is nothing so secret, that shall not be brought to light, within the compass of the world.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
7. Particular office or character.
The pneumatual part, which is in all tangible bodies, and hath some affinity with the air, performeth the parts of the air: as, when you knock upon an empty barrel, the sound is, in part, created by the air on the outside, and, in part, by the air in the inside. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Accuse not nature, she hath done her part;
Do thou but thine. Milton. Par. Lost.
8. Character appropriated in a play.
That part
Was aptly fitted, and naturally performed.

Conjoins with my disease. Shakespeare.
11. Relation reciprocal.
Inquire not whether the sacraments confer grace by their own excellency, because they, who affirm they do, require so much duty on our parts, as they also do, who attribute the effect to our moral disposition. Taylor.
The scripture tells us the terms of this covenant on God's part and ours; namely, that he will be our God, and we shall be his people. Tilley's Sermons.

PAR

It might be deem'd, on our historian's part,
Or too much negligence, or want of art,
If he forgot the vast magnificence Of royal Thebes. Dryden.
12. In good part; in ill part; as well done; as ill done.
God accepteth it in good part, at the hands of faithful men. Hooker.
13. [In the plural.] Qualities; powers; faculties; or accomplishments.
Who is courteous, noble, liberal, but he that hath the example before his eyes of Amphialus; where are all heroical parts, but in Amphialus? Sidney.
Such licentious parts tend, for the most part, to the hurt of the English, or maintenance of their own lewd liberty.
Spenser on Ireland.
I conjure thee, by all the parts of man,
Which honour does acknowledge. Shakespeare.
Solomon was a prince adorned with such parts of mind, and exalted by such a concurrence of all prosperous events to make him magnificent. South's Sermons.

ments, without improvement. Felton on the Classics.
14. [In the plural.] Quarters; regions; districts.
Although no man was, in our parts, spoken of, but he,
for his manhood; yet, as though therein he excelled himself, he was called the courteous Amphialus. Sidney.
When he had gone over those parts, he came into Greece.
Acts xx. 2.
All parts resound with tumults, complaints, and fears,
And griev'd death, in sundry shapes, appears. Dryden.
PART. adv. Partly; in some measure.
For the fair kindness you have shew'd me,
And part being prompted, by your present trouble,
I'll lend you something. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
TO PART. v. a.
1. To divide; to share; to distribute.
All that believed, sold their goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need. Acts ii. 45.
Jove himself no less content wou'd be
To part his throne, and share his heav'n with thee. Pope.
2. To separate; to disunite.
A chariot of fire parted them both asunder, and Elijah went up to heaven. 2 Kings ii. 11.
Nought but death shall part thee and me. Ruth i. 17.
All the world,
As 'twere the bus'ness of mankind to part us,
Is arm'd against my love. Dryden.

How shall I part, and whither wander. Milton.
Upon his removal, they parted from him with tears in their eyes. Swift.
4. To have share.
As his part is, that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be, that tarieth by the stuff; they shall part alike.
Isaiah xxx. 24.
5. [Partir, Fr.] To go away; to set out.

PAR

So parted they; the angel up to heaven
From the thick shade, and Adam to his bow'r. Milton.
Thy father
Embrace'd me, parting for the Etrurian land. Dryden.
6. TO PART WITH. To quit; to resign; to lose; to be separated from.
For her sake, I do rear up her boy;
And for her sake, I will not part with him. Shakespeare.
An affectionate wife, when in fear of parting with her beloved husband, heartily desired of God his life or society;
upon any conditions that were not sinful. Taylor.
Celia, for thy sake, I part
With all that grew so near my heart;
And that I may successful prove,
Transform myself to what you love. Waller.
Thou marble hew'd, ere long to part with breath,
And houses rear'd, unmindful of thy death. Sandys.
Lixivate salts, though, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, they dispose them to part readily with their tincture; yet some tinctures they do not only draw out, but likewise alter. Boyle.
The ideas of hunger and warmth are some of the first that children have, and which they scarce ever part with. Locke.
What a despicable figure must mock-patriots make, who venture to be hang'd for the ruin of those civil rights, which their ancestors, rather than part with, chose to be cut to pieces in the field of battle? Addison's Freeholder.
The good things of this world so delight in, as remember, that we are to part with them, to exchange them for more durable enjoyments. Atterbury's Sermons.
As for riches and power, our Saviour plainly determineth, that the best way to make them blessings, is to part with them. Swift's Miscellanies.
PARTABLE. adj. [from part.] Divisible; such as may be parted.
His hot love was partable among three other of his mistresses. Camden's Remains.
PARTAGE. n. f. [partage, Fr.] Division; act of sharing or parting. A word merely French.
Men have agreed to a disproportionate and unequal possession of the earth, having found out a way, how a man may fairly possess more land, than he himself can use the product of, by receiving, in exchange, for the overplus, gold and silver: this partage of things, in an equality of private possessions, men have made practicable out of the bounds of society, without compact, only by putting a value on gold and silver, and tacitly agreeing in the use of money. Locke.
TO PARTAKE. v. n. Preterite, I partook: participle passive, partaken. [part and take.]
1. To have share of any thing; to take share with.
Partake and use my kingdom as your own,
And shall be yours while I command the crown. Dryden.
How far brutes partake in this faculty, is not easy to determine. Locke.
2. To participate; to have something of the property, nature, claim, or right.

You may partake of any thing we say;
We speak no treason. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
4. Sometimes with in before the thing partaken of.
I took occasion to conjecture, how far brutes partook with men, in any of the intellectual faculties. Locke.
Truth and falsehood have no other trial, but reason and proof, which they made use of to make themselves knowing, and so must others too, that will partake in their knowledge.
Locke.
5. To combine; to enter into some design. An unusual sense.
As it prevents factions and partakings, so it keeps the rule and administration of the laws uniform. Hale.
TO PARTAKE. v. a.
1. To share; to have part in.
By and by, thy bosom shall partake
The secrets of my heart. Shakespeare.
At season fit,
Let her with thee partake, what thou hast heard. Milton.
My royal father lives,
Let ev'ry one partake the general joy. Dryden.
2. To admit to part; to extend participation. Obsolete.
My friend, hight Philemon, I did partake
Of all my love, and all my privacy,
Who greatly joyous seem'd for my sake. Fa. Queen.

PARTAKER. n. f. [from partake.]
1. A partner in possessions; a sharer of any thing; an associate with.
They whom earnest lets hinder from being partakers of the whole, have yet, through length of divine service, opportunity for access unto some reasonable part thereof. Hooker.

PAR

Didst thou
Make us partakers of a little gain;
That now our loss might be ten times as much. Shakefp.
With such the must return at setting light,
Tho' not partaker, witness of their night. Prior.
His bitterest enemies were partakers of his kindness, and he still continued to entreat them to accept of life from him, and, with tears of compassion, bewailed their infidelity.
Calamy's Sermons.

2. Sometimes with in before the thing partaken.
With me partaker in thy happiness,
When thou dost meet good hap. Shakefp.
If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets.
Matthew xxiii. 30.

3. Accomplish; associate.
Thou contentedst, and hast been partaker with adulterers.
He took upon him the person of the duke of York, and drew with him complices and partakers. Bacon.
PARTER. n. f. [from part.] One that parts or separates.
The chief part of the fray was night, which, with her black arms, pulled their malicious fights one from the other.
Sidney.

PARTERRE. n. f. [parterre, Fr.] A level division of ground, that, for the most part, faces the south and best front of an house, and is generally furnished with greens, flowers, &c.
Miller.
There are as many kinds of gardening, as of poetry; your makers of partes and flower gardens are epigramatists and sonneteers. Spectator, N° 477.
The vast partes a thousand hands shall make;
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake. Pope.

PARTIAL. adj. [partial, French.]
1. Inclined antecedently to favour one party in a cause, or one side of the question more than the other.
Ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law. Mal. ii. 9.
2. Inclined to favour without reason.
Self-love will make men partial to themselves and friends, and ill nature, passion, and revenge will carry them too far in punishing others; and hence, God hath appointed governments to restrain the partiality and violence of men. Locke.
Authors are partial to their wit, 'tis true,
But are not critics to their judgment too. Pope.
In these, one may be sincerer to a reasonable friend, than to a fond and partial parent. Pope.

3. Affecting only one part; subsisting only in a part; not general; not universal; not total.
If we compare these partial dissolutions of the earth with an universal dissolution, we may as easily conceive an universal deluge from an universal dissolution, as a partial deluge from a partial. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
That which weakens religion, will at length destroy it; for the weakening of a thing is only a partial destruction of
it. South's Sermons.
All discord, harmony, not underfoot;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

PARTIALITY. n. f. [partialité, Fr. from partial.] Unequal state of the judgment and favour of one above the other, without just reason.
Then would the Irish party cry out partiality, and complain he is not used as a subject, he is not suffered to have the free benefit of the law. Spenser on Ireland.
Partiality is properly the understanding's judging according to the inclination of the will and affections, and not according to the exact truth of things, or the merits of the cause. South.
As there is a partiality to opinions, which is apt to mislead the understanding; so there is also a partiality to studies, which is prejudicial to knowledge. Locke.

TO PARTIALIZE. v. a. [partialiser, Fr. from partial.] To make partial. A word, perhaps, peculiar to Shakespeare, and not unworthy of general use.
Such neighbour-neariness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
Th' unflinching firmness of my upright soul. Shakefp.

PARTIALLY. adv. [from partial.]
1. With unjust favour or dislike.
2. In part; not totally.
That stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The message he brought, opened a clear prospect of eternal salvation, which had been but obscurely and partially figured in the shadows of the law. Rogers's Sermons.

PARTIBILITY. n. f. [from partible.] Divisibility; separability.
PARTIBLE. adj. [from part.] Divisible; separable.
Make the moulds partible, glued or cemented together, that you may open them, when you take out the fruit. Bacon.
The same body, in one circumstance, is more weighty;
and, in another, is more partible. Digby on the Soul.

PARTICIPABLE. adj. [from participate.] Such as may be shared or partaken.

PAR

Plato, by his ideas, means only the divine essence with this connotation, as it is variously imitable or participable by created beings. Norris's Miscellanies.

PARTICIPANT. adj. [participant, Fr. from participate.] Sharing; having share or part.
During the parliament, he published his proclamation, offering pardon to all such as had taken arms, or been participant of any attempts against him; so as they submitted themselves. Bacon.
The prince saw he should confer with one participant of more than monkish speculations. Watson.
If any part of my body be so mortified, as it becomes like a rotten branch of a tree, it putrefies, and is not participant of influence derived from my soul, because it is now no longer in it to quicken it. Hale.

TO PARTICIPATE. v. n. [participo, Lat. particeps, Fr.]
1. To partake; to have share.
Th' other instruments
Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel;
And mutually participate. Shakefp.
2. With of.
An aged citizen brought forth all his provisions, and said, that as he did communicate unto them his store, so would he participate of their wants. Hayward.

3. With in.
His delivery, and thy joy thereon,
In both which we, as next, participate. Milton.

4. To have part of more things than one.
Few creatures participate of the nature of plants and metals both. Bacon.
God, when heav'n and earth he did create,
Form'd man, who should of both participate. Denham.
Those bodies, which are under a light, which is extended and distributed equally through all, should participate of each others colours. Dryden.

5. To have part of something common with another.
The species of audibles seem to participate more with local motion, like percussions made upon the air. Bacon.

TO PARTICIPATE. v. a. To partake; to receive part of; to share.
As Christ's incarnation and passion can be available to no man's good, which is not made partaker of Christ, neither can we participate him without his presence. Hooker.
The French seldom achieved any honourable acts without Scottish hands, who therefore are to participate the glory with them. Camden's Remains.

Fellowship,
Such as I seek, fit to participate
All rational delight; wherein the brute Cannot be human comfort. Milt. Par. Lost.

PARTICIPATION. n. f. [participation, Fr. from participate.]
1. The state of sharing something in common.
Civil society doth more content the nature of man, than any private kind of solitary living; because, in society, this good of mutual participation is so much larger. Hooker.
Their spirits are so married in conjunction, with the participation of society, that they flock together in consent, like so many wild geese. Shakefp. Henry IV.
A joint coronation of himself and his queen might give any countenance of participation of title. Bacon.

2. The act or state of partaking or having part of something.
All things seek the highest, and covet more or less the participation of God himself. Hooker.
Those deities are so by participation, and subordinate to the supreme. Stillington.
What an honour, that God should admit us into such a blessed participation of himself? Atterbury.
Convince them, that brutes have the least participation of thought, and they retract. Bentley's Sermon.
Your genius should mount above that mist, in which its participation and neighbourhood with earth long involved it.
Pope.

3. Distribution; division into shares.
It sufficeth not, that the country hath wherewith to sustain even more than to live upon it, if means be wanting whereby to drive convenient participation of the general store into a great number of well-deservers. Raleigh.

PARTICIPIAL. adj. [participialis, Lat.] Having the nature of a participate.
PARTICIPIALLY. adv. [from participate.] In the sense or manner of a participate.
PARTICIPIE. n. f. [participium, Lat.]
1. A word partaking at once the qualities of a noun and verb.
A participate as is a particular sort of adjective, formed from a verb, and together with its signification of action, passion, or some other manner of existence, signifying the time thereof. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

2. Any thing that participates of different things.
The participles or confiners between plants and living creatures, are such as are fixed, though they have a motion in their parts: such as, oysters and cockles. Bacon.

PARTICULE. n. f. [particule, Fr. particula, Lat.]
1. Any small portion of a greater substance. There

From any of the other unreasonable demands, the houses had not given their commissioners authority in the least partide to recede. Clarendon.
There is not one grain in the universe, either too much or too little, nothing to be added, nothing to be spared; nor so much as any one partide of it, that mankind may not be either the better or the worse for, according as 'tis applied. L'Estr.
With partides of heav'nly fire,
The God of nature did his soul inspire. Dryden.
Curious wits,
With rapture, with astonishment reflect,
On the small size of atoms, which unite
To make the smallest partide of light. Blackmore.
It is not impossible, but that microscopes may, at length, be improved to the discovery of the partides of bodies, on which their colours depend. Newton's Opticks.
Blest with more partides of heav'nly flame. Granville.

2. A word unvaried by inflexion.
Till Arianism had made it a matter of great sharpness and subtlety of wit to be a found believing christian, men were not curious what syllables or partides of speech they used.
Hooker, b. v.
The Latin varies the signification of verbs and nouns, not as the modern languages, by partides prefixed, but by changing the last syllables. Locke on Education.
Partides are the words, whereby the mind signifies what connection it gives to the several affirmations and negations, that it unites in one continued reasoning or narration. Locke.
In the Hebrew tongue, there is a partide, consisting but of one single letter, of which there are reckoned up above fifty several significations. Locke.

PARTICULAR. adj. [particulier, French.]
1. Relating to single persons; not general.
He, as well with general orations, as particular dealing with men of most credit, made them see how necessary it was. Sidney.
As well for particular application to special occasions, as also in other manifold respects, infinite treasures of wisdom are abundantly to be found in the holy scripture. Hooker.

2. Individual; one distinct from others.
Wherefore one plant draweth such a particular juice out of the earth, as it qualifyeth the earth, so as that juice, which remaineth, is fit for the other plant; there the neighbourhood doth good. Bacon.
This is true of actions considered in their general nature or kind; but not considered in their particular individual instances. South's Sermons.
Artists, who propose only the imitation of such a particular person, without election of ideas, have often been reproached for that omission. Dryden.

3. Noting properties or things peculiar.
Of this prince there is little particular memory; only that he was very studious and learned. Bacon.

4. Attentive to things single and distinct.
I have been particular in examining the reason of children's inheriting the property of their fathers, because it will give us farther light in the inheritance of power. Locke.

5. Single; not general.
Rather performing his general commandment, which had ever been, to embrace virtue, than any new particular, sprung out of passion, and contrary to the former. Sidney.

6. Odd; having something that eminently distinguishes him from others. This is commonly used in a sense of contempt.
PARTICULAR. n. f.
1. A single instance; a single point.
I must reserve some particulars, which it is not lawful for me to reveal. Bacon.
Those notions are universal, and what is universal must needs proceed from some universal constant principle; the same in all particulars, which can be nothing else but human nature. South's Sermons.
Having the idea of an elephant or an angle in my mind, the first and natural enquiry is, whether such a thing does exist? and this knowledge is only of particulars. Locke.
And if we will take them, as they were directed, in particular to her, or in her, as their representative, to all other women, they will, at most, concern the female sex only, and import no more but that subjection, they should ordinarily be in, to their husbands. Locke.
The master could hardly sit on his horse for laughing, all the while he was giving me the particulars of this story. Addison.
Vespasian he resembled in many particulars. Swift.

2. Individual; private person.
It is the greatest interest of particulars, to advance the good of the community. L'Estrange.

3. Private interest.
Our wisdom must be such, as doth not propose to itself to destroy our own particulars, the partial and immoderate desire whereof poisoneth wherefore it taketh place; but the scope and mark, which we are to aim at, is the publick and common good. Hooker.
They apply their minds even with hearty affection and zeal, at the least, unto those branches of publick prayer, wherein their own particular is moved. Hooker, b. 5.

His general lov'd him Shakefp.

In a most dear particular.
4. Private character; single self; state of an individual.
For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

5. A minute detail of things singly enumerated.
The reader has a particular of the books, wherein this law was written. Ayliffe's Parergon.

6. Distinct not general recital.
Invention is called a muse, authors ascribe to each of them, in particular, the sciences which they have invented. Dryden.

PARTICULARITY. n. f. [particularité, Fr. from particular.]
1. Distinct notice or enumeration; not general assertion.
So did the boldness of their affirmation accompany the greatness of what they did affirm, even descending to particularities, what kingdoms he should overcome. Sidney.

2. Singleness; individuality.
Knowledge imprinted in the minds of all men, whereby both general principles for directing of human actions are com-prehended, and conclusions derived from them, upon which conclusions groweth, in particularity, the choice of good and evil. Hooker, b. ii.

3. Petty account; private incident.
To see the titles that were most agreeable to such an emperor, the flatteries that he lay most open to, with the like particularities only to be met with on medals, are certainly not a little pleasing. Addison.

4. Something belonging to single persons.
Let the general trumpet blow his blast;
Particularities and petty founds Shakefp. Henry VI.
To cease.
5. Something peculiar.
I saw an old heathen altar, with this particularity, that it was hollowed like a dish at one end; but not the end on which the sacrifice was laid. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
He applied himself to the coquette's heart; there occurred many particularities in this dissection. Addison.

TO PARTICULARIZE. v. a. [particulariser, Fr. from particular.] To mention distinctly; to detail; to shew minutely.
The leanness that afflicts us, is an inventory to particularize their abundance. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He not only boasts of his parentage as an Israelite, but par-ticularizes his descent from Benjamin. Atterbury's Sermons.

PARTICULARLY. v. a. [from particular.]
1. Distinctly; singly; not universally.
Providence, that universally casts its eye over all the creation, is yet pleased more particularly to fasten it upon some.
South's Sermons.

2. In an extraordinary degree.
This exact propriety of Virgil, I particularly regarded as a great part of his character. Dryden.
With the flower and the leaf I was so particularly pleased, both for the invention and the moral, that I commend it to the reader. Dryden.

TO PARTICULARIZE. v. a. [from particular.] To make mention singly. Obsolete.
I may not particulate of Alexander Hales, the irretra-gable doctor. Camden's Remains.

PARTISAN. n. f. [partisan, French.]
1. A kind of pike or halberd.
Let us
Find out the prettiest dazied plot we can;
And make him with our pikes and partisans
A grave. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Shall I strike at it with my partisan? Shakefp. Hamlet.

2. [From parti, French.] An adherent to a faction.
Some of these partisans concluded, the government had hired men to be bound and punnioned. Addison.
I would be glad any partisan would help me to a tolerable reason, that, because Clodius and Curio agree with me in a few singular notions, I must blindly follow them in all. Swift.

3. The commander of a party.
4. A commander's leading staff. Ainsworth.

PARTITION. n. f. [partition, Fr. partitio, Latin.]
1. The act of dividing; a state of being divided.
We grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
But yet an union in partition. Shakefp.

2. Division; separation; distinction.
We have, in this respect, our churches divided by certain partition, although not to many in number as theirs. Hooker.
Can we not
Partition make with spectacles so precious Twixt fair and foul? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That ev'n our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition. Shakefp.
The day, month and year, measured by them, are used as standard measures, as likely others arbitrarily deduced from them by partition or collection. Holder on Time.

3. Part

PAR

3. Part divided from the rest; separate part.
Lodge'd in a small partition; and the rest
Ordain'd for use to his Lord best known. Milton.
4. That by which different parts are separated.
It doth not follow, that God, without respect, doth teach us to erect between us and them a partition wall of difference, in such things indifferent as have hitherto been disputed of.
Hooker, b. iv. f. 6.
Make partitions of wood in a hoghead, with holes in them, and mark the difference of their sound from that of an hoghead without such partitions. Bacon.
Partition firm and sure,
The waters underneath from those above Dividing. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Enclosures our factions have made in the church, become a great partition wall to keep others out of it.
Decay of Piety.
At one end of it, is a great partition, designed for an opera. Addison.
The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way.
Rogers's Sermons.
5. Part where separation is made.
The mound was newly made, no fight could pass
Betwixt the nice partitions of the grass,
The well-united feds so closely lay. Dryden.
To PARTITION. v. a. To divide into distinct parts.
These fides are uniform without, though feversally partitioned within. Bacon.
PARTLET. n. f. A name given to a hen; the original signification being a ruff or band, or covering for the neck.
Hammer.
Thou dotard, thou art woman tir'd; unroofed
By thy dame partlet here. Shakesp.
Tir'd with pinn'd ruffs, and fans, and partlet strips. Hall.
Dame partlet was the sovereign of his heart;
He feather'd her. Dryden's Fables.
PARTLY. adv. [from part.] In some measure; in some degree; in part.
That part, which, since the coming of Christ, partly hath embraced, and partly shall hereafter embrace the christian religion, we term, as by a more proper name, the church of Christ. Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.
The inhabitants of Naples have been always very notorious for leading a life of laziness and pleasure, which I take to arise out of the wonderful plenty of their country, that does not make labour so necessary to them, and partly out of the temper of their climate, that relaxes the fibres of their bodies, and disposes the people to such an idle indolent humour. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
PARTNER. n. f. [from part.]
1. Partaker; sharer; one who has part in any thing; associate.
My noble partner,
You greet with present grace,
That he seems rapt withal. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Noble partners
Touch you the fowrest points with sweetest terms. Shakesp.
Thofe of the race of Sem were no partners in the unbelieving work of the tower. Raleigh's History.
To undergo Myself the total crime; or to accuse
My other self, the partner of my life. Milton.
Sapor, king of Persia, had an heaven of glass, which, proudly sitting in his estate, he trod upon, calling himself brother to the sun and moon, and partner with the stars.
Peacham's Geometry.
The foul continues in her action, till her partner is again qualified to bear her company. Addison.
2. One who dances with another.
Lead in your ladies every one; sweet partner,
I must not yet forsake you. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
To PARTNER. v. a. [from the noun.] To join; to associate with a partner.
A lady who
So fair, and fasten'd to an empery,
Would make the great'st king double: to be partner'd
With tomboys, hir'd with self-exhibition,
Which your own coffers yield. Shakesp.
PARTNERSHIP. n. f. [from partner.]
1. Joint interest or property.
He does possession keep,
And is too wise to hazard partnership. Dryden.
2. The union of two or more in the same trade.
'Tis a necessary rule in alliances, partnerships and all manner of civil dealings, to have a strict regard to the disposition of those we have to do withal. L'Estrange.
PARTOOK. Preterite of partake.
PARTRIDGE. n. f. [from perdrix, Fr. pertris, Welsh; perdix, Lat.]
A bird of game.
The king is come out to seek a fee, as when one doth hunt a partridge in the mountains. Sam. xxvi. 20.

PAR

- PARTURIENT*. adj. [from parturiens, Lat.] About to bring forth.
PARTURITION. n. f. [from parturis, Latin.] The state of being about to bring forth.
Conformation of parts is required, not only unto the previous conditions of birth, but also unto the parturition or very birth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PARTY. n. f. [from partie, French.]
1. A number of persons confederated by similarity of designs or opinions in opposition to others; a faction.
When any of these combatants strips his terms of ambiguity, I shall think him a champion for truth, and not the slave of vain glory or a party. Locke.
This account of party patches will appear improbable to those, who live at a distance from the fashionable world. Addison.
Party writers are so sensible of the secret virtue of an innuendo, that they never mention the q—n at length. Spectator.
This party rage in women only serves to aggravate animosities that reign among them. Addison's Spectator, No 81.
As he never leads the conversation into the violence and rage of party disputes, I listened to him with pleasure. Taylor.
Division between those of the same party, exposes them to their enemies. Pope.
The most violent party men are such, as, in the conduct of their lives, have discovered least sense of religion or morality. Swift.
2. One of two litigants.
When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if pinched with the cholic, you make faces like mummies, and dismiss the controversy more entangled by your hearing;
all the peace you make in their cause, is calling both parties knaves. Shakesp.
The cause of both parties shall come before the judges.
Exodus xxi. 9.
If a bishop be a party to a suit, and excommunicates his adversary; such excommunication shall not bar his adversary from his action. Ayliffe's Parergon.
3. One concerned in any affair.
The child was prisoner to the womb, and is Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to The anger of the king, nor guilty of The trespass of the queen. Shakesp.
I do suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury. Shakesp.
4. Side; persons engaged against each other.
Our Poes compell'd by need, have peace embrac'd:
The peace, both parties want, is like to last. Dryden.
5. Cause; side.
Egle came in, to make their party good. Dryden.
6. A select assembly.
Let me extol a cat, on oysters fed,
I'll have a party at the Bedford-head. Pope.
If the clergy would a little study the arts of conversation, they might be welcome at every party, where there was the least regard for politeness or good sense. Swift.
7. Particular person; a person distinct from, or opposed to, another.
As the paced on, she was stopped with a number of trees, so thickly placed together, that she was afraid the should,
with rushing through, stop the speech of the lamentable party, which she was so desirous to understand. Sidney.
The minister of justice may, for publick example, vir-tuously will the execution of that party, whose pardon another, for confanguinity's sake, as virtuously may desire. Hooker.
If the jury found, that the party slain was of English race, it had been adjudged felony. Davies on Ireland.
How shall this be compass'd? canst thou bring me to the party? Shakespeare's Tempest.
The smoke received into the nostrils, causes the party to lie as if he were drunk. Abbot's Description of the World.
The imagination of the party to be cured, is not needful to concur; for it may be done without the knowledge of the party wounded. Bacon's Natural History.
He that confesses his sin, and prays for pardon, hath punished his fault: and then there is nothing left to be done by the offended party, but to return to charity. Taylor.
Though there is a real difference between one man and another, yet the party, who has the advantage, usually magnifies the inequality. Collier on Pride.
8. A detachment of soldiers: as, he commanded that party sent thither.
- PARTY-COLOURED*. adj. [from party and coloured.] Having diversity of colours.
The fulsome ewes,
Then conceiving, did, in yeanning time,
Fall party-colour'd lambs. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.
The leopard was valuing himself upon the lustre of his party-coloured skin. L'Estrange.
From one father both,
Both girt with gold, and clad in party-colour'd cloth. Dryden.
Constrain'd him in a bird, and made him fly
With party-colour'd plumes a chattering pie. Dryden.
I looked

PAS

- I looked with as much pleasure upon the little party-coloured assembly, as upon a bed of tulips.
Nor is it hard to beautify each month Addison's Spectator.
With files of party-colour'd fruits. Phillips.
Four knaves in garb succinct, a trusty band,
And party-coloured troops, a shining train,
Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain. Pope.
PARTY-JURY. n. f. [in law.] A jury in some trials half foreigners and half natives.
PARTY-MAN. n. f. [from party and man.] A factious person; an adversary of a party.
PARTY-WALL. n. f. [from party and wall.] Wall that separates one house from the next.
'Tis an ill custom among bricklayers to work up a whole story of the party-walls, before they work up the fronts. Mason's Mechanical Exercises.
PARTIS. n. f. [Fr.] A church or church porch: applied to the moodings of law-disputes among young students in the inns of courts, and also to that disputation at Oxford, called dispu- tatio in partis. Bailey.
PARTITUDE. n. f. [from parvus, Latin.] Littleness; minuteness.
The little ones of partitude cannot reach to the fame floor with them. Glanville.
PARTIVITY. n. f. [from parvus, Lat.] Littleness; minuteness.
What are these for fineness and parvity, to those minute animalcula discovered in pepper-water. Ray.
PAS. n. f. [French.] Precedence; right of going foremost.
In her poor circumstances, she still prefer'd the mien of a gentlewoman; when she came into any full assembly, she would not yield the pas to the best of them. Arbuthnot.
PASCHAL. adj. [from pascha, French; paschalis, Latin.]
1. Relating to the passover.
2. Relating to Easter.
PASH. n. f. [from pas, Spanish.] A kiss. Hammer.
Thou want'st a rough pas, and the shoots that I have,
To be full like me. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
To PASH. v. a. [from persen, Dutch.] To strike; to crush.
With my armed fist
I'll pas him o'er the face. Shakespeare.
Thy cunning engines have with labour rais'd
My heavy anger, like a mighty weight,
To fall and pas thee dead. Dryden.
PASQUE-FLOWER. n. f. [from pasquilla, Latin.]
The flower consists of several leaves, which are placed in a circular order, and expand in form of a rose; out of the middle of which rises a point, best, for the most part, with chives, which afterward becomes a fruit, in which the seeds are gathered, as it were in a little head, each ending in a small hair: to which must be added some little leaves, encompassing the pedicle below the flower; as the anemone, from which the pasque-flower differs in the seeds, ending in a tail. Miller.
PASQUIL. n. f. [from pasquino, a statue at Rome, to PASQUIN.] which they affix any lampoon or paper of PASQUINADE.] satirical observation.] A lampoon.
He never valued any pasquils that were dropped up and down, to think them worthy of his revenge. Howell.
The pasquils, lampoons, and libels, we meet with now-a-days, are a sort of playing with the four and twenty letters, without sense, truth, or wit. Taylor, N° 92.
To PASS. v. n. [from passer, French; passus, a step, Latin.]
1. To go; to move from one place to another; to be progressive.
Tell him his long trouble is passing. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
Out of this world. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
If I have found favour in thy fight, pas not away from thy servant. Genes.
While my glory passeth by, I will put thee in a cleft of the rock, and will cover thee, while I pas by. Exodus xxxiii. 22.
Thus will I cut off him that passeth out, and him that returneth. Ezekiel xxxv. 7.
They took the fords of Jordan, and suffered not a man to pas over. Judges iii. 28.
This heap and this pillar be witnesses, that I will not pas over to thee, and that thou shalt not pas over it and this pillar unto me for harm. Genes xxxi. 52.
An idea of motion not passing on, is not better than idea of motion at rest. Locke.
Heedless of those cares, with anguish hung,
He felt their Recesses as they pas'd along.
If the cause be visible, we stop at the instrument, and fel-dom pas on to him that directed it. Wake's Prep. for Death.
2. To go; to make way.
Her face, her hands were torn
With passing through the brakes. Dryden.
3. To make transition from one thing to another.
Others dissatisfied with what they have, and not trusting to those innocent ways of getting more, fall to others, and pas from just to unjust. Temple's Miscellanies.

PAS

4. To vanish; to be lost.
Trust not too much to that enchanting face;
Beauty's a charm, but soon the charm will pass. Dryden.
5. To be spent; to go away.
The time, when the thing existed, is the idea of that space of duration, which passed between some fixed period and the being of that thing. Locke.
We see, that one who fixes his thoughts very intently on one thing, so as to take but little notice of the succession of ideas that pass in his mind, whilst he is taken up with that earnest contemplation, lets slip out of his account a good part of that duration, and thinks that time shorter than it is. Locke.
6. To be at an end; to be over.
Their officious haste,
Who would before have born him to the sky;
Like eager Romans, ere all rites were pass'd;
Did let too soon the sacred eagle fly. Dryden.
7. To die; to pass from the present life to another state.
The pangs of death do make him grin;
Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably. Shakesp.
8. To be changed by regular gradation.
Inflammations are translated from other parts to the lungs;
a pleurisy easily passeth into a peripneumony. Arbuthnot.
9. To go beyond bounds. Obsolete.
Why this passer, Mr. Ford:—you are not to go loose any longer, you must be pinnioned. Shakesp.
10. To be in any state.
I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant. Ezekiel xx. 37.
11. To be enacted.
Many of the nobility spoke in parliament against those things, which were most grateful to his majesty, and which still passed, notwithstanding their contradiction. Clarendon.
Neither of these bills have yet passed the house of commons, and some think they may be rejected. Swift.
This pernicious project, if passed into a law, would have been of the worst consequence. Swift.
12. To be effected; to exist. Unless this may be thought a noun with the articles suppressed, and be explained thus: it came to the pass that.
I have heard it enquired, how it might be brought to pass that the church should every where have able preachers to instruct the people. Hooker, b. v. f. 3.
When the case required diffimulation, if they used it, it came to pass that the former opinion of their good faith made them almost invisible. Bacon's Essays.
13. To gain reception; to become current: as, this money will not pass.
That trick, said she, will not pass twice. Hudibras.
Their excellencies will not pass for such in the opinion of the learned, but only as things which have less of error in them. Dryden.
False eloquence passeth only where true is not understood, and no body will commend bad writers, that is acquainted with good. Fulton on the Classics.
The grossest suppositions pass upon them, that the wild Irish were taken in toys; but that, in some time, they would grow tame. Swift.
14. To be practised artfully or successfully.
This practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon thee;
But when we know the grounds and authors of it,
Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge. Shakesp.
Though frauds may pass upon men, they are as open as the light to him that searches the heart. L'Estrange.
15. To be regarded as good or ill.
He rejected the authority of councils, and so do all the reformed; so that this won't pass for a fault in him, 'till 'tis proved one in us. Atterbury.
16. To occur; to be transacted.
If we would judge of the nature of spirits, we must have recourse to our own consciousness of what passes within our own mind. Watts's Logick.
17. To be done.
Zeal may be let loose in matters of direct duty, as in prayers, provided that no indirect act pass upon them to defile them. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
18. To heed; to regard.
As for these silken-coated slaves, I pas not;
It is to you, good people, that I speak,
O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign. Shakesp.
19. To determine finally; to judge capitally.
Though well we may not pas upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r Shall do a court'sy to our wrath. Shakesp.
20. To be supremely excellent.
To thrust; to make a push in fencing.
To see thee fight, to see thee pas thy puncto. Shakesp.
Both advance
Against each other, and with sword and lance
They lash, they foil, they pas, they strive to bore
Their conflicts. Dryden.

22. To omit.
Full piteous seems young Alma's case,
As in a luckless gambler's place,
She would not play, yet must not pass.
23. To go through the alimentary duct.
Substances hard cannot be dissolved, but they will pass;
but such, whose tenacity exceeds the powers of digestion, will neither pass, nor be converted into aliment.
24. To be in a tolerable state.
A middling sort of man was left well enough to pass by his father, but could never think he had enough, so long as any had more.
25. To Pass away. To be lost; to glide off.
Defining the soul to be a substance that always thinks, can serve but to make many men suspect, that they have no souls at all, since they find a good part of their lives pass away without thinking.
26. To Pass away. To vanish.
To Pass. v. a.
1. To go beyond.
As it is advantageous to a physician to be called to the cure of a declining disease; so it is for a commander to suppress a sedition, which has passed the height: for in both the noxious humour doth first weaken, and afterwards waste to nothing.
2. To go through: as, the horse passed the river.
3. To spend; to live through.
Were I not assured he was removed to advantage, I should pass my time extremely ill without him.
You know in what deluding joys we pass
The night that was by heav'n decreed our last.
We have examples of such, as pass most of their nights without dreaming.
The people, free from cares, serene and gay,
Pass all their mild untroubled hours away.
In the midst of the service, a lady, who had passed the winter at London with her husband, entered the congregation.
4. To impart to any thing the power of moving.
Dr. Thurston thinks the principal use of inspiration to be, to move, or pass the blood, from the right to the left ventricle of the heart.
5. To carry hastily.
I had only time to pass my eye over the medals, which are in great number.
6. To transfer to another proprietor.
He that will pass his land,
As I have mine, may set his hand
And heart unto this deed, when he hath read;
And make the purchase spread.
7. To strain; to percolate.
They speak of severing wine from water, passing it through ivy wood.
8. To vent; to let out.
How many thousands take upon them to pass their censures on the personal actions of others, and pronounce boldly on the affairs of the publick.
They will commend the work in general, but pass to many fly remarks upon it afterwards, as shall destroy all their cold praises.
9. To utter ceremoniously.
Many of the lords and some of the commons passed some compliments to the two lords.
10. To utter solemnly.
He pass his promise, and was as good as his word.
11. To transmit.
Waller passed over five thousand horse and foot by Newbridge.
12. To put an end to.
This night
We'll pass the business privately and well.
13. To surpass; to excel.
She more sweet than any bird on bough
Would oftentimes amongst them bear a part,
And strive to pass, as the could well enough,
Their native music by her skilful art.
Whom do'st thou pass in beauty?
Martial, thou gav'st far nobler epigrams
To thy Domitian, than I can my James;
But in my royal subject I pass thee,
Thou flattered'st thine, mine cannot flatter'd be.
The ancestor and all his heirs,
Though they in number pass the stars of heav'n,
Are still but one.
14. To omit; to neglect.
If you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the rounder of your old fac'd walls
Can hide you.
Let me o'erleap that custom; for I cannot Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them;
Please you that I may pass this doing.

- I pass the wars, that spotted linx's make
With their fierce rivals.
I pass their warlike pomp, their proud array.
15. To transcend; to transcend.
They did pass those bounds, and did return since that time.
16. To admit; to allow.
The money of every one that passeth the account, let the priests take.
17. To enact a law.
I'll pass them all upon account,
As if your nat'l self had don't.
18. To impose fraudulently.
The indulgent mother did her care employ,
And pass'd it on her husband for a boy.
19. To practice artfully; to make succeed.
Time lays open frauds, and after that discovery there is no passing the same trick upon the mice.
20. To send from one place to another: as, pass that beggar to his own parish.
21. To Pass away. To spend; to waste.
The father waketh for the daughter, lest she pass away the flower of her age.
22. To Pass by. To excuse; to forgive.
However God may pass by single sinners in this world; yet when a nation combines against him, the wicked shall not go unpunished.
23. To Pass by. To neglect; to disregard.
How far ought this enterprise to wait upon these other matters, to be mingled with them, or to pass by them, and give law to them, as inferior unto itself?
It conduces much to our content, if we pass by those things which happen to our trouble, and consider that which is properous; that, by the representation of the better, the worse may be blotted out.
Certain passages of scripture we cannot, without injury to truth, pass by here in silence.
24. To Pass over. To omit; to let go unregarded.
Better to pass him o'er, than to relate
The cause I have your mighty fire to hate.
It does not belong to this place to have that point debated, nor will it hinder our pursuit to pass it over in silence.
The poet passes it over as hastily as he can, as if he were afraid of staying in the cave.
The queen asked him, who he was; but he passes over this without any reply, and reserves the greatest part of his story to a time of more leisure.
PASS. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A narrow entrance; an avenue.
The straight pass was damm'd
With dead men.
It would be easy to defend the passes into the whole country, that the king's army should never be able to enter.
Truth is a strong hold, fortified by God and nature, and diligence is properly the understanding's laying siege to it; so that it must be perpetually observing all the avenues and passes to it, and accordingly making its approaches.
2. Passage; road.
The Tyrians had no pass to the Red Sea, but through the territory of Solomon, and by his sufferance.
Pity tempts the pass;
But the tough metal of my heart resists.
3. A permission to go or come anywhere.
They shall protect all that come in, and send them to the lord deputy, with their safe conduct or pass, to be at his disposition.
We bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment.
Give quiet pass
Through your dominions for this enterprise.
A gentleman had a pass to go beyond the seas.
If they should send for a pass to France, the ceremony in asking and granting it would be liable to the same objections of delay.
4. An order by which vagrants or impotent persons are sent to their place of abode.
5. Push; thrust in fencing.
'Tis dangerous when the baser nature comes Between the pass and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.
The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits.

P A S

- With seeming innocence the crowd beguil'd;
But made the desperate passer, when he smil'd.
6. State; condition.
To what a pass are our minds brought, that, from the right line of virtue, are wry'd to these crooked shifts?
After King Henry united the roses, they laboured to reduce both English and Irish, which work, to what pass and perfection it was brought, in queen Elizabeth's reign, hath been declared.
I could see plate, hangings and paintings about my house till you had the ordering of me, but I am now brought to such pass, that I can see nothing at all.
Matters have been brought to this pass, that if one among a man's sons had any blemish, he laid him aside for the ministry, and such an one was presently approved.
PASSABLE. adj. [passible, Fr. from pass.]
1. Possible to be passed or travelled through or over.
Antiochus departed in all haste, weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot.
2. Supportable; tolerable; allowable.
His body is a passable carcass, if he be not hurt. It is a Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
They are crafty and of a passable reach of understanding.
In counterfeits, it is with men as with false money; one piece is more or less passable than another.
Lay by Virgil, my version will appear a passable beauty when the original mule is absent.
White and red well mingled on the face, make what was before but passable, appear beautiful.
3. Capable of admission or reception.
These stage advocates are not only without truth, but without colour: could they have made the slander passable, we should have heard farther.
4. Popular; well received. This is a sense less usual.
Where there is no eminent odds in sufficiency, it is better to take with the more passable, than with the more able.
A man of the one faction, which is most passable with the other, commonly giveth best way.
PASSADO. n. f. [Italian.] A push; a thrust.
A duellist, a gentleman of the very first house; ah! the immortal passage.
PASSAGE. n. f. [passage, French.]
1. Act of passing; travel; course; journey.
The story of such a passage was true, and Jason with the rest went indeed to rob Colchos, to which they might arrive by boat.
So shalt thou best prepar'd endure
Thy mortal passage when it comes.
Live like those who look upon themselves as being only on their passage through this state, but as belonging to that which is to come.
Though the passage be troublesome, yet it is secure, and shall in a little time bring us ease and peace at the last.
2. Road; way.
Human actions are so uncertain, as that seemeth the best course, which hath most passages out of it.
The land enterprise of Panama was grounded upon a false account, that the passages towards it were no better fortified than Drake had left them.
Is there yet no other way besides
These painful passages, how we may come
To death, and mix with our conmutual dust?
Against which open'd from beneath
A passage down to th' earth, a passage wide.
When the passage is open, land will be turned most to great cattle; when shut, to sheep.
The Persian army had advanced into the straight passages of Cilicia, by which means Alexander with his small army was able to fight and conquer them.
The passage made by many a winding way,
Reach'd e'en the room, in which the tyrant lay.
He plies him with redoubled strokes;
Wheels as he wheels; and with his pointed dart
Explores the nearest passage to his heart.
I wish'd for the wings of an eagle, to fly away to those happy seats; but the genius told me there was no passage to them, except through the gates of death.
I have often stopp'd all the passages to prevent the ants going to their own nest.
When the gravel is separated from the kidney, oily substances relax the passages.
3. Entrance or exit; liberty to pass.
What, are my doors oppos'd against my passage?
4. The state of decay. Not in use.
Would some part of my young years
Might but redeem the passage of your age!
5. Intellectual admittance; mental acceptance.
I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastic learning, among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage than among those deeply imbued with other principles.

6. Occurrence; hap.
It is no act of common passage, but
A strain of rareness.
7. Unsettled state; aptness by condition or nature to change the place of abode.
Most traders in Ireland are but factors; the cause must be rather an ill opinion of security than of gain: the last intices the poorer traders, young beginners, or those of passage; but without the first, the rich will never settle in the country.
In man the judgment shoots at flying game;
A bird of passage? lost as soon as found;
Now in the moon perhaps, now under ground.
8. Incident; transaction.
This business as it is a very high passage of state, so it is worthy of serious consideration.
Thou do'st it in thy passages of life
Make me believe that thou art only mark'd
For the hot vengeance of heav'n.
9. Management; conduct.
Upon consideration of the conduct and passage of affairs in former times, the state of England ought to be cleared of an imputation cast upon it.
10. Part of a book; single place in a writing.
A critic who has no taste nor learning, seldom ventures to praise any passage in an author who has not been before received by the publick.
As to the cantos, all the passages are as fabulous as the vision at the beginning.
PASSER. n. f. [passer, French.]
1. A traveller; one who is upon the road; a wayfarer.
All the way, the wanton damsel found
New mirth, her passenger to entertain.
What hollowing, and what stir is this?
These are my mates that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chafe.
The nodding horror of whole shady brows
Threats the forlorn and wand'ring passenger.
Apelles, when he had finished any work, exposed it to the sight of all passengers, and concealed himself to hear the censure of his faults.
2. One who hires in any vehicle the liberty of travelling.
The diligent pilot in a dangerous tempest doth attend the unskillful words of a passenger.
PASSENGER. n. f. [passenger, French.] A kind of migratory hawk.
P'ASSER. n. f. [from pass.] One who passes; one that is upon the road.
Under you ride the home and foreign shipping in so near a distance, that, without troubling the passer or borrowing Stentor's voice, you may confer with any in the town.
Have we so soon forgot,
When, like a matron, butcher'd by her sons,
And cast beside some common way a spectacle
Of horror and affright to passers by,
Our groaning country bled at every vein.
PASSIBILITY. n. f. [passibilité, Fr. from passible.] Quality of receiving impressions from external agents.
The last doubt, touching the passibility of the matter of the heavens, is drawn from the eclipses of the sun and moon.
PASSIBLE. adj. [passible, Fr. passibilis, Lat.] Susceptible of impressions from external agents.
Theodoret disputeth with great earnestness, that God cannot be said to suffer; but he thereby meaneth Christ's divine nature against Apollinarius, which held even deity itself passible.
PASSIBILITY. n. f. [from passible.] Quality of receiving impressions from external agents.
It drew after it the heresy of the passibility of the deity, because the deity of Christ was become, in their conceits, the same nature with the humanity that was passible.
PASSING. participial adj. [from pass.]
1. Supreme; surpassing others; eminent.
No strength of arms shall win this noble fort,
Or shake this puissant wall, such passing might Have spells and charms, if they be said aright.
The manner how he fall'd forth.
2. It is used adverbially to enforce the meaning of another word.
Exceeding.
Oberon is passing fell and wroth.

Many in each region passing fair
As the noon sky; more like to goddesses
Than mortal creatures. Milton's Paradise Lost.
She was not only passing fair,
But was withal discreet and debonaire. Dryden.
While thus we stood as in a froud,
Full soon by bonfire and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.
PASSINGBELL. n. f. [passing and bell.] The bell which rings at the hour of departure, to obtain prayers for the passing soul:
it is often used for the bell, which rings immediately after death.
Those loving papers,
Thicken on you now, as pray'rs ascend
To heaven in troops at a good man's passingbell. Donne.
A talk of tumult, and a breath
Would serve him as his passingbell to death. Daniel.
Before the passingbell begun,
The news through half the town has run. Swift.
PASSION. n. f. [passion, French; passio, Latin.]
1. Any effect caused by external agency.
The differences of mouldable and not mouldable, scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter are plebeian notions, applied to the instruments men ordinarily practise. Bacon.
A body at rest affords us no idea of any active power to move, and when, set in motion, it is rather a passion than an action in it. Locke.
2. Violent commotion of the mind.
All the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts and rash embrac'd despair. Shakefp.
Thence every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep: whose every passion fully strives
To make itself in thee fair and admired. Shakespeare.
Vex'd I am
Of late, with passions of some difference. Shakespeare.
I am doubtful, left
You break into some merry passion,
And so offend him:
If you should smile, he grows impatient.
In loving thou do'st well, in passion not;
Wherein true love confists not. Milton's Par. Lost.
Cruel his eye, but cast
Signs of remorse and passion, to behold
The fellows of his crime condemn'd
For ever now to have their lot in pain. Milton's Par. Lost.
Passion's too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.
All the art of rhetoric, besides order and perspicuity, only moves the passions, and thereby misleads the judgment. Locke.
3. Anger.
The word passion signifies the receiving any action in a large philosophical sense; in a more limited philosophical sense, it signifies any of the affections of human nature; as love, fear, joy, sorrow: but the common people confine it only to anger. Watts.
4. Zeal; ardour.
Where statemen are ruled by faction and interest, they can have no passion for the glory of their country, nor any concern for the figure it will make. Addison on Medals.
5. Love.
For your love,
You kill'd her father: you confest'd you drew
A mighty argument to prove your passion for the daughter.
A mighty argument to prove your passion for the daughter.
He, to grate me more,
Publickly own'd his passion for Amestris. Rotue.
Survey yourself, and then forgive your slave,
Think what a passion such a form must have. Granvil.
6. Eagerness.
Abate a little of that violent passion for fine cloaths, so predominant in your sex. Swift.
7. Emphatically. The last suffering of the redeemer of the world.
He shew'd himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs. Acts i. 3.
To PASSION. v. n. [passionner, Fr. from the noun.] To be extremely agitated; to express great commotion of mind.
Obsolete.
'Twas Ariadne passioning
For Theseus' perjury and unjust flight. Shakespeare.
PASSION-FLOWER. n. f. [granadilla, Latin.]
Passion-flower hath a double calyx, the first consisting of three leaves, the other of five, which expand in form of a star: the flowers consist of five leaves each, and are of a rofaceous form: in the centre of the flower arises the pointal, with a crown fringed at the bottom, but furnished with a tender embryo at the top, on which stand three clubs, under which are the stamina, with rough obtuse apices, which always incline downward; the embryo turns to an oval or globular fruit, fleshy, and consisting of one cell, which is full of seeds adhering to the sides, and covered with a sort of hood or veil. Miller.

PASSION-WEEK. n. f. The week immediately preceding Easter, named in commemoration of our Saviour's crucifixion.
PASSIONATE. adj. [passionné, French.]
1. Moved by passion; causing or expressing great commotion of mind.
My whole endeavour is to resolve the conscience, and to shew what, in this controversy, the heart is to think, if it will follow the light of sound and sincere judgment, without either cloud of prejudice or mist of passionate affection. Hooker.
Thucydides observes, that men are much more passionate for injustice than for violence; because the one coming as from an equal seems rapine; when the other proceeding from one stronger is but the effect of necessity. Clarendon.
Good angels looked upon this ship of Noah's with a passionate concern for its safety. Burnet.
Men, upon the near approach of death, have been roused up into such a lively sense of their guilt, such a passionate degree of concern and remorse, that, if ten thousand ghosts had appeared to them, they scarce could have had a fuller conviction of their danger. Atterbury's Sermon.
2. Easily moved to anger.
Homer's Achilles is haughty and passionate, impatient of any restraint by laws, and arrogant in arms. Prior.
To PASSIONATE. v. a. [from passion.] An old word. Obsolete.
1. To affect with passion.
Great pleasure mix'd with pitiful regard,
That godly king and queen did passionate,
Whilist they his pitiful adventures heard,
That oft they did lament his luckless fate. Fairy Queen.
2. To express passionately.
Thy niece and I want hands,
And cannot passionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.
PASSIONATELY. adv. [from passionate.]
1. With passion; with desire, love or hatred; with great commotion of mind.
Whoever passionately covets any thing he has not, has lost his hold. L'Estrange.
If sorrow expresses itself never so loudly and passionately, and discharge itself in never so many tears, yet it will no more purge a man's heart, than the washing of his hands can cleanse the rottenness of his bones. South's Sermons.
I made Melchinda, in opposition to Nourmahal, a woman passionately loving of her husband, patient of injuries and contempt, and constant in her kindness. Dryden.
2. Angrily.
They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.
PASSIONATENESS. n. f. [from passionate.]
1. State of being subject to passion.
2. Vehemence of mind.
To love with some passionateness the person you would marry, is not only allowable but expedient. Boyle.
PASSIVELY. adj. [passif, French; passivus, Latin.]
1. Receiving impression from some external agent.
High above the ground
Their march was, and the passive air upbore
Their nimble tread. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The active informations of the intellect, filling the passive reception of the will, like form clothing with matter, grew actuate into a third and distinct perfection of practice. South.
As the mind is wholly passive in the reception of all its simple ideas, so it exerts several acts of its own, whereby, out of its simple ideas, the other is formed. Locke.
The vis inertiae is a passive principle by which bodies persist in their motion or rest, receive motion in proportion to the force impressing it, and resist as much as they are resisted:
by this principle alone, there never could have been any motion in the world. Newton's Opticks.
2. Unresisting; not opposing.
Not those alone, who passive own her laws,
But who, weak rebels, more advance her cause. Dunciad.
3. Suffering; not acting.
4. [In grammar.]
A verb passive is that which signifies passion or the effect of action: as, discor, I am taught. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
PASSIVELY. adv. [from passive.] With a passive nature.
Though some are passively inclin'd,
The greater part degenerate from their kind. Dryden.
PASSIVENESS. n. f. [from passive.]
1. Quality of receiving impression from external agents.
2. Passibility; power of suffering.
We shall lose our passiveness with our being, and be as incapable of suffering as heaven can make us. Decay of Piety.
PASSIVITY. n. f. [from passive.] Passiveness. An innovated word.
There being no mean between penetrability and impenetrability, between passivity and activity, these being contrary and opposite, the infinite rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
PASSOVER.

PAS

PASSOVER. n. f. [pasch and over.]
1. A feast instituted among the Jews in memory of the time when God, smiting the first-born of the Egyptians, passed over the habitations of the Hebrews.
The Jews passover was at hand, and Jesus went up. Jo. ii. 13.
The Lord's passover, commonly called Easter, was ordered by the common law to be celebrated every year on a Sunday. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. The sacrifice killed.
Take a lamb, and kill the passover. Exodus xii. 21.
PASSPORT. n. f. [passport, Fr.] Permission of egress.
Under that pretext, fain the would have given a secret
passport to her affection. Sidney.
Giving his reason passport for to pass
Whither it would, so it would let him die. Sidney.
Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convoy put into his purse. Shakespeare.
Having used extreme caution in granting passports to Ireland, he conceived that paper not to have been delivered. Clar.
The gospel has then only a free admission into the assent of the understanding, when it brings a passport from a rightly disposed will, as being the faculty of dominion, that commands all, that shuts out, and lets in, what objects it pleases. South's Sermons.
Admitted in the shining throng,
He shows the passport which he brought along;
His passport is his innocence and grace,
Well known to all the natives of the place. Dryden.
At our meeting in another world;
For thou hast drunk thy passport out of this. Dryden.
PAST. participial adj. [from pass.]
1. Not present; not to come.
Past, and to come, seem best; things present worst. Shak.
For several months past, papers have been written upon the best publick principle, the love of our country. Swift.
This not alone has shone on ages past,
But lights the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.
2. Spent; gone through; undergone.
A life of glorious labours past. Pope.
PAST. n. f. Elliptically used for past time.
The past is all by death possest,
And frugal fate that guards the rest,
By giving bids us live to-day. Fenton.
PAST. preposition.
1. Beyond in time.
Sarah was delivered of a child, when she was past age. Hebrews xi. 11.
2. No longer capable of.
Pervent prayers he made, when he was esteem'd past sense, and so spent his last breath in committing his soul unto the Almighty. Hayward.
3. Beyond; out of reach of.
We must not Prostitute our past cure malady
To empiricks. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
What's gone, and what's past help,
Should be past grief. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Many men have not yet finned themselves past all sense or feeling, but have some regrets; and when their spirits are at any time disturbed with the sense of their guilt, they are for a little time more watchful over their ways; but they are soon disheartened. Calany's Sermons.
Love, when once past government, is consequently past shame. L'Estrange.
Her life she might have had; but the despair
Of saving his, had put it past her care. Dryden.
I'm stupify'd with sorrow, past relief
Of tears. Dryden.
That the bare receiving a sum should sink a man into a servile state, is past my comprehension. Collier on Pride.
That he means paternal power, is past doubt from the inference he makes. Locke.
4. Beyond; further than.
We will go by the king's high way, until we be past thy borders. Numbers xxi. 22.
5. Above; more than.
The northern Irish Scots have bows not past three quarters of a yard long, with a string of wreathed hemp and their arrows not much above an ell. Spenser on Ireland.
The same inundation was not deep, not past forty foot from the ground. Bacon.
PASTE. n. f. [paste, French.]
1. Any thing mixed up so as to be viscous and tenacious: such as flour and water for bread or pies; or various kinds of earth mingled for the potter.
Except you could bray Christendom in a mortar; and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of a holy war. Bacon's Holy War.
With particles of heav'nly fire
The God of nature did his soul inspire;
Which wise Prometheus temper'd into paste,
And, mixt with living streams, the godlike image cast. Dryd.

PAS

When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands. Dryden.
He has the whitest hand that ever you saw, and raises paste better than any woman. Addison's Spectator, N° 482.
2. Flour and water boiled together so as to make a cement.
3. Artificial mixture, in imitation of precious stones.
PASTE. v. a. [pastre, Fr. from the noun.] To fasten with paste.
By pasting the vowels and consonants on the sides of dice, his eldest son played himself into spelling. Locke.
Young creatures have learned their letters and syllables, by having them pasted upon little flat tablets. Watts.
PASTEBOARD. n. f. [paste and board.] Masses made anciently by pasting one's paper on another: now made sometimes by macerating paper and casting it in moulds, sometimes by pounding old cordage, and casting it in forms.
Tintoret made chambers of board and pasteboard, proportioned to his models, with doors and windows, through which he distributed, on his figures, artificial lights. Dryden.
I would not make myself merry even with a piece of paste- board, that is invested with a publick character. Addison.
PASTEBOARD. adj. Made of pasteboard.
Put silkworms on whitened brown paper into a pasteboard
box. Mortimer's Husbandry.
PASTEL. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
PASTER. n. f. [pasturum, French.]
1. The knee of an horse.
I will not change my horse with any that treads on four pasterns. Shakespeare's Henry V.
The colt that for a stallion is design'd,
Upright he walks on pasterns firm and straight,
His motions easy, prancing in his gait. Dryden.
Being heavy, he should not tread stiff, but have a pastern made him, to break the force of his weight: by this his body hangs on the hoof, as a coach doth by the leathers. Grew.
2. The legs of an human creature in contempt.
So straight the walk'd, and on her pasterns high:
If seeing her behind, he lik'd her pace,
Now turning short, he better lik'd her face. Dryden.
PASTIL. n. f. [pastillus, Lat. pastille, Fr.] A roll of paste.
To draw with dry colours, make long pastils, by grinding red led with strong wort, and so roll them up like pencils, drying them in the sun. Peascham on Drawing.
PASTIME. n. f. [passi and time.] Sport; amusement; diversion.
It was more requisite for Zelmane's hurt to rest, than sit up at those pastimes; but she, that felt no wound but one, earnestly desired to have the pastors. Sidney, b. i.
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream;
And make a pastime of each weary step,
'Till the last step has brought me to my love. Shakespeare.
Pastime passing excellent,
If husbanded with modesty. Shakespeare.
With these
Find pastime, and bear rule; thy realm is large. Milton.
A man, much addicted to luxury, recreation and pastime, should never pretend to devote himself entirely to the sciences;
unless his soul be so refined, that he can taste these entertainments eminently in his closet. Watts.
PASTOR. n. f. [pastor, Latin; pasteur, old French.]
1. A shepherd.
Receive this present by the muses made,
The pipe on which the Ascræan pastor play'd. Dryden.
The pastor shears their hoary beards,
And eates of their hair the loaden herds. Dryden.
2. A clergyman who has the care of a flock; one who has souls to feed with sound doctrine.
The pastor maketh suits of the people, and they with one voice testify a general assent thereto, or he joyfully beginneth, and they with like alacrity follow; dividing between the sentences wherewith they strive, which shall much shew his own, and stir up others zeal to the glory of God. Hooker, b. v. f. 39.
The first branch of the great work belonging to a pastor of the church, was to teach. South's Sermons.
A breach in the general form of worship was reckoned too unpopular to be attempted, neither was the expedient then found out of maintaining separate pastors out of private purses. Swift.
PASTORAL. adj. [pastoralis, Latin; pastoral, French.]
1. Rural; rustic; befitting shepherds; imitating shepherds.
In those pastoral pastimes, a great many days were sent to follow their flying predecessors. Sidney.
2. Relating to the care of souls.
Their lord and master taught concerning the pastoral care he had over his own flock. Hooker, b. v. f. 19.
The bishop of Salisbury recommended the tenth satire of Juvenal, in his pastoral letter, to the serious perusal of the divines of his diocese. Dryden.
PASTORAL. n. f. A poem in which any action or passion is represented by its effects upon a country life; or according to the common practice in which speakers take upon them the character of shepherds; an idyl; a bucolick.
19 G Pastoral

PAT

Pastoral is an imitation of the action of a shepherd, the form of this imitation is dramatick or narrative, or mixed of both, the fable simple, the manners not too polite nor too rustick.

The best actors in the world, for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

There ought to be the same difference between pastorals and elegies, as between the life of the country and the court; the latter should be smooth, clean, tender and passionate: the thoughts may be bold, more gay, and more elevated than in pastoral. Walſh.

PASTRY. n. f. [paſſerie, Fr. from paſte.]

- The act of making pies.
Let never fresh machines your pastry try,
Unless grandees or magistrates are by,
Then you may put a dwarf into a pye. King.
- Pies or baked paste.
Remember
The feed cake, the pastries and the furmenty pot. Tuſſer.
They call for dates and quinces in the pastry. Shakeſp.
Beasts of chase, or fowls of game,
In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd, Gris amber steam'd. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
- The place where pastry is made.
PASTRY-COOK. n. f. [pastry and cook.] One whose trade is to make and sell things baked in paste.
I with you knew what my husband has paid to the pastry-cooks and confectioners. Arbutnot.
- PASTURABLE. adj. [from pasture.] Fit for pasture.
- PASTURAGE. n. f. [pasturage, French.]
1. The business of feeding cattle.
I with there were some ordinances, that whoſoever keepeth twenty kine, should keep a plough going; for otherwise all men would fall to pasturage, and none to husbandry. Spenser on Ireland.
2. Lands grazed by cattle.
France has a sheep by her to shew, that the riches of the country consisted chiefly in flocks and pasturage. Addiſon.
3. The use of pasture.
Cattle fattened by good pasturage, after violent motion, die suddenly. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- PASTURE. n. f. [pasture, French.]
1. Food; the act of feeding.
Unto the conservation is required a solid pasture, and a food congenious unto nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. Ground on which cattle feed.
A careless herd,
Full of the pasture, jumps along by him,
And never stays. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.
When there was not room for their herds to feed together, they, by consent, separated and enlarged their pasture where it best liked them. Locke.
The new tribes look abroad
On nature's common, far as they can see Or wing, their range and pasture. Thomson's Spring.
- Human culture; education.
From the first pastures of our infant age,
To elder cares and man's severer page
We laſh the pupil. Dryden.
- PASTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To place in a pasture.
PASTURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To graze on the ground.
The cattle in the fields and meadows green
Those rare and solitary; these in flocks Feasting at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton.
- PASTY. n. f. [paste, French.] A pye of crust raised without a diſh.
Of the paste a coffin will I rear,
And make two pasties of your shameful heads. Shakeſp.
I will confess what I know; if ye pinch me like a pasty, I can say no more. Shakeſpeare.
If you'd fright an alderman and mayor,
Within a pasty lodge a living hare. King.
A man of sober life,
Not quite a madman, though a pasty fell,
And much too wise to walk into a well. Pope.
- PAT. adj. [from pas, Dutch, Skinner.] Fit; convenient; exactly suitable either as to time or place. This is a low word, and should not be used but in burlesque writings.
Pat pat; and here's a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. Shakeſpeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.
Now I might do it pat, now he is praying.
They never saw two things so pat,
In all respects, as this and that. Hudibras, p. ii.
Zuinglius dreamed of a text, which he found very pat to his doctrine of the Eucharist. Atterbury.
He was surely put to't at the end of a verse,
Because he could find no word to come pat in. Swift.
- PAT. n. f. [pattie, Fr. is a foot, and thence pat may be a blow with the foot.]
1. A light quick blow; a tap.
The least noise is enough to disturb the operation of his brain; the pat of a shuttle-cock, or the creaking of a jack will do.

PAT

2. Small lump of matter beat into shape with the hand.
To PAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike lightly; to tap.
Children prove, whether they can rub upon the breast with one hand, and pat upon the forehead with another, and straightways they pat with both. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Gay pats my shoulder, and you vanish quite. Pope.- PATACHE. n. f. A small ship.
- PATACON. n. f. A Spanish coin worth four shillings and eight pence English.
- PATCH. v. n. [putzer, Danish; pezzare, Italian.]
1. To cover with a piece sewed on.
They would think themselves miserable in a patched coat, and yet their minds appear in a pie-bald livery of coarse patches and borrowed shreds. Locke.
2. To decorate the face with small spots of black silk.
In the middle boxes, were several ladies who patched both sides of their faces. Addiſon's Spectator, N° 81.
We begg'd her but to patch her face,
She never hit one proper place. Swift.
3. To mend clumsily; to mend so as that the original strength or beauty is lost.
Anything mended, is but patch'd. Shakeſp.
Physick can but mend our crazy state,
Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryden.
Broken limbs, common prudence sends us to the surgeons to piece and patch up. L'Eſtrange.
- To make up of shreds or different pieces. Sometimes with up emphatical.
If we seek to judge of those times, which the scriptures set us down without error, by the reigns of the Assyrian princes, we shall but patch up the story at adventure, and leave it in confusion. Raleigh's History of the World.
His glorious end was a patch'd work of fate,
Ill sort'd with a soft effeminate life. Dryden.
There is that visible symmetry in a human body, as gives an intrinsic evidence, that it was not formed successively and patched up by piece-meal. Bentley's Sermons.
Enlarging an author's sense, and building fancies of our own upon his foundation, we may call paraphrasing; but more properly changing, adding, patching, piecing. Fellm.
- PATCH. n. f. [pezzo, Italian.]
1. A piece sewed on to cover a hole.
Patches set upon a little breach,
Discredit more in hiding of the flaw,
Than did the flaw before it was so patch'd. Shakeſp.
If the shoe be ript, or patches put;
He's wounded! see the plaister on his foot. Dryden.
They suffer their minds to appear in a pie-bald livery of coarse patches and borrowed shreds, such as the common opinion of those they converse with clothe them in. Locke.
2. A piece inserted in mosaic or variegated work.
3. A small spot of black silk put on the face.
How! providence! and yet a Scottish crew!
Then madam nature wears black patches too. Cleaveland.
If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.
They were patched differently, and cast hostile glances upon one another, and their patches were placed in different situations as party-signals to distinguish friends from foes. Addiſ.
This the morning omens seem'd to tell;
Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-box fell. Pope.
- A small particle; a parcel of land.
We go to gain a little patch of ground,
That hath in it no profit but the name. Shakeſp.
- A paltry fellow. Obsolete.
What a py'd ninny's this? thou scurvy patch! Shakeſp.
- PATCHER. n. f. [from patch.] One that patches; a botcher.
- PATCHERY. n. f. [from patch.] Botchery; bungling work.
Forgery. A word not in use.
You hear him cogg, see him dissemble,
Know his gross patchery, love him, and feed him,
Yet remain assur'd that he's a made-up villain. Shakeſp.
- PATCHWORK. n. f. [patch and work.] Work made by sewing small pieces of different colours interchangeably together.
When my cloaths were finished, they looked like the patchwork, only mine were all of a colour. Gulliver's Travels.
Whoever only reads to transcribe shining remarks, without entering into the genius and spirit of the author, will be apt to be misled out of the regular way of thinking; and all the product of all this will be found a manifest incoherent piece of patchwork. Swift.
Foreign her air, her robe's discordant pride
In patchwork flut'ring. Daniel.
- PATE. n. f. [This is derived by Skinner from tête, Fr.] The head. Now commonly used in contempt or ridicule, but attentively in serious language.
Senseless man, that himself doth hate,
To love another;
Here take thy lover's token on thy pate. Fairy Queen.

PAT

Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tuſſer.
He is a traitor, let him to the tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his. Shakeſp.
Steal by line and level is an excellent pate of pate. Shakeſp.
That fly devil,
That broker that still breaks the pate of faith,
That daily breakvow. Shakeſp.
I had broke thy pate,
And ask'd thee mercy for't. Shakeſp.
Who dares
Say this man is a flatterer. The learned pate Ducks to the golden fool. Shakeſp.
Thank your gentler fate,
That, for a bruise'd or broken pate,
Has freed you from those knobs that grow
Much harder on the married brow. Hudibras.
If only scorn attends men for asserting the church's dignity, many will rather chuse to neglect their duty, than to get a broken pate in the church's service. South's Sermons.
If any young novice happens into the neighbourhood of flatterers, presently they are plying his full purse and empty pate with addresses suitable to his vanity. South.- PATED. adj. [from pate.] Having a pate. It is used only in composition: as, long-pated or cunning; shallow-pated or foolish.
- PATEFACTION. n. f. [patefactio, Latin.] Act or state of opening.
- PATEN. n. f. [patina, Latin.] A plate. Not in use.
The floor of heav'n
Is thick inlaid with patens of bright gold;
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel flings. Shakeſp.
- PATENT. adj. [patens, Latin; patent, French.]
1. Open to the perusal of all: as, letters patent.
2. Something appropriated by letters patent.
Madder is esteem'd a commodity that will turn to good profit; so that, in king Charles the first's time, it was made a patent commodity. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- PATENT. n. f. A writ conferring some exclusive right or privilege.
If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; for if it touch not you, it comes near no body. Shakeſpeare.
So will I grow, so live, so die,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up Unto his lordship. Shakeſpeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.
We are censured as obstinate, in not complying with a royal patent. Swift.
- PATENTEE. n. f. [from patent.] One who has a patent.
If his tenant and patentee dispose of his gift, without his kingly consent, the lands shall revert to the king. Bacon.
In the patent granted to lord Dartmouth, the securities obliged the patentee to receive his money back upon every demand. Swift.
- PATER-NOSTER. n. f. [Lat.] The Lord's prayer.
No penny no pater-noster. Camden's Remains.
- PATERNAL. adj. [paternus, Lat. paternal, Fr.]
1. [Fatherly; having the relation of a father; pertaining to a father.
I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.
Admonitions fraternal or paternal of his fellow christians or governors of the church. Hammond.
They spend their days in joy unblam'd; and dwell
Long time in peace, by families and tribes, Under paternal rule. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Men plough with oxen of their own
Their small paternal field of corn. Dryden.
He held his paternal estate from the bounty of the conqueror. Dryden.
Retreat betimes
To thy paternal seat, the Sabine field,
Where the great Cato toil'd with his own hands. Addiſon.
- PATERNITY. n. f. [from paternus, Lat. paternity, Fr.] Fathership; the relation of a father.
The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and elderhip. Raleigh.
A young heir, kept short by his father, might be known by his countenance; in this case, the paternity and filiation leave very sensible impressions. Arbutnot.
- PATH. n. f. [paß, Saxon.] Way; road; track. In conversation it is used of a narrow way to be pass'd on foot; but in solemn language means any passage.
For darkness, where is the place thereof? that thou shouldst know the paths to the house thereof. Job xxxviii. 20.
On the glad earth the golden age renew,
And thy great father's path to heav'n pursue. Dryden.

PAT

The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets. Dryden's Theocritus.
There is but one road by which to climb up, and they have a very severe law against any that enters the town by another path, lest any new one should be worn on the mountain. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

PATHE'TICAL. [παθητικός; pathetique, Fr.] Affecting PATHE'TICK. } the passions; passionate; moving.
His page that handful of wit;
'Tis a most pathetical neat. Shakeſp.
How pathetick is that expostulation of Job, when, for the trial of his patience, he was made to look upon himself in this deplorable condition. Spektor, N° 571.
Tully considered the dispositions of a sincere and less mercenary nation, by dwelling on the pathetick part. Swift.
While thus pathetick to the prince he spoke,
From the brave youth the streaming passion broke. Pope.

PATHE'TICALLY. adv. [from pathetick.] In such a manner as may strike the passions.
These reasons, so pathetically urged and so admirably raised by the propopoeia of nature, speaking to her children with so much authority, deserve the pains I have taken. Dryden.

PATHE'TICALNESS. n. f. [from pathetick.] Quality of being pathetick; quality of moving the passion.

PATHE'LESS. adj. [from path.] Untrodden; not marked with paths.
Ask thou the citizens of pathless woods;
What cut the air with wings, what swim in floods. Sandys.
Like one that had been led astray
Through the heav'n's wide pathless way. Milton.
In fortune's empire blindly thus we go,
And wander after pathless destiny,
Whose dark resorts since prudence cannot know;
In vain it would provide. Dryden.
Through mists obscure, she wings her tedious way,
Now wanders dazzl'd with too bright a day;
And from the summit of a pathless coast Sees infinite, and in that sight is lost. Prior.

PATHOGNOMONICK. adj. [παθognomonικός, παθος and γνωμονικός.] Such signs of a disease as are inseparable, designing the essence or real nature of the disease; not symptomatick. Quincy.
He has the true pathognomonick sign of love, jealousy; for no body will suffer his mistress to be treated so. Arbutnot.

PATHOLOGICAL. adj. [pathologique, Fr. from pathology.] Relating to the tokens or discoverable effects of a distemper.

PATHOLOGIST. n. f. [παθολόγος and λέγω.] One who treats of pathology.

PATHOLOGY. n. f. [παθος and λέγω; pathologie, Fr.] That part of medicine which relates to the distemper, with their differences, causes and effects incident to the human body. Quincy.

PATHWAY. n. f. [path and way.] A road; strictly a narrow way to be pass'd on foot.
Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes see pathways to his ill. Shakeſp.
In the way of righteousness is life, and in the pathway thereof there is no death. Proverbs xii. 28.
When in the middle pathway basks the snake;
O lead me, guard me from the sultry hours. Gay.

PATIBLE. adj. [from patior, Lat.] Sufferable; tolerable. Diſt.

PATIBULARY. adj. [patibulaire, Fr. from patibulum, Latin.] Belonging to the gallows. Diſt.

PATIENCE. n. f. [patience, French; patientia, Latin.]
1. The power of suffering; endurance; the power of expecting long without rage or discontent; the power of supporting faults or injuries without revenge; long suffering.
The king becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
Necessary patience in seeking the Lord, is better than he that leadeth his life without a guide. Ecclesi. xx. 32.
Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. Matthew.
Christian fortitude and patience have their opportunity in times of affliction and persecution. Sprat's Sermons.
Frequent debauch to habitude prevails,
Patience of toil and love of virtue fails. Prior.- 2. Sufferance; permission.
By their patience, be it spoken, the apostles preached as well when they wrote, as when they spake the gospel. Hooker.
- 3. An herb. A species of dock.
Patience, an herb, makes a good boiled fallad. Mortimer.
- PATIENT. adj. [patient, Fr. patients, Latin.]
1. Having the quality of enduring.
Wheat, which is the best sort of grain, of which the purest bread is made, is patient of heat and cold. Ray.
- 2. Calm under pain or affliction.
Be patient, and I will stay. Shakeſp. Henry VI.
Grieved, but unmov'd, and patient of your scorn,
I die. Dryden's Theocritus.
- 3. Not revengeful against injuries.
4. Not easily provoked.
Warn them that are unruly, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thessalonians v. 14.

PAT

5. Not hasty; not viciously eager or impetuous.
Too indolent to be great,
Nor patient to expect the turns of fate,
They open'd camps deform'd by civil fight. Prior.
PATIENT. n. f. [patient, Fr.]
1. That which receives impressions from external agents.
Malice is a passion so impetuous and precipitate, that it often involves the agent and the patient. Gov. of the Tongue.
To proper patients he kind agents brings,
In various leagues binds disagreeing things. Creech.
Action and passion are modes which belong to substances:
when a smith with a hammer strikes a piece of iron, the hammer and the smith are both agents or subjects of action;
the one supreme, and the other subordinate: the iron is the patient or the subject of passion, in a philosophical sense, because it receives the operation of the agent. Watts's Logic.
2. A person diseased. It is commonly used of the relation between the sick and the physician.
You deal with me like a physician, that seeing his patient in a pestilent fever, should chide instead of administering help, and bid him be sick no more. Sidney.
Through ignorance of the disease, through unreasonableness of the time, instead of good he worketh hurt, and out of one evil throweth the patient into many miseries. Spenser.
A physician uses various methods for the recovery of sick persons; and though all of them are disagreeable, his patients are never angry. Addison.
3. It is sometimes, but rarely used absolutely for a sick person.
Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies or beds of state;
But the poor patient will as soon be found On the hard matres or the mother ground. Dryden.
PATIENT. v. a. [patient, Fr.] To compose one's self;
to behave with patience. Obsolete.
PATIENTLY. adv. [from patient.]
1. Without rage under pain or affliction.
Lament not, Eve, but patiently resign
What justly thou hast lost. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Ned is in the gout,
Lies rack'd with pain, and you without,
How patiently you hear him groan!
How glad the case is not your own. Swift.
2. Without vicious impetuosity.
That which they grant, we gladly accept at their hands, and with that patiently they would examine how little cause they have to deny that which as yet they grant not. Hooker.
Could men but once be persuaded patiently to attend to the dictates of their own minds, religion would gain more profelytes. Calamy's Sermons.
PATINE. n. f. [patina, Lat.] The cover of a chalice. Ainsf.
PATLY. adv. [from pat.] Commodiously; fitly.
PATRIARCH. n. f. [patriarche, Fr. patriarcha, Latin.]
1. One who governs by paternal right; the father and ruler of a family.
So spake the patriarch of mankind; but Eve Perfisted, yet submiss. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees,
Three centuries he grows, and three he flays
Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryden.
2. A bishop superior to archbishops.
The patriarchs for an hundred years had been of one house, to the prejudice of the church, and there yet remained one bishop of the same kindred. Raleigh.
Where secular primates were heretofore given, the ecclesiastical laws have ordered patriarchs and ecclesiastical primates to be placed. Ayliffe's Parergon.
PATRIARCHAL. adj. [patriarchal, Fr. from patriarch.]
1. Belonging to patriarchs; such as was possessed or enjoyed by patriarchs.
Such drowsy sedentary souls have they,
Who would to patriarchal years live on,
Fix'd to hereditary clays,
And know no climate but their own. Norris.
Nimrod enjoyed this patriarchal power; but he against right enlarged his empire, by seizing violently on the rights of other lords. Locke.
2. Belonging to hierarchical patriarchs.
Archbishops or metropolitans in France are immediately subject to the pope's jurisdiction; and, in other places, they are immediately subject to the patriarchal sees. Ayliffe.
PATRIARCHATE. n. f. [patriarchat, Fr. from patriarch.] A PATRIARCHSHIP. n. f. [patriarchat, Fr. from patriarch.] A Patriarchship may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship and archbishoprick. Ayliffe.
PATRIARCHY. n. f. Jurisdiction of a patriarch; patriarchate.
Calabria pertained to the patriarch of Constantinople, as appeareth in the novel of Leo Sophus, touching the precedence of metropolitans belonging to that patriarchy. Brerewood.
PATRICIAN. adj. [patrician, Fr. patricius, Lat.] Senatorial; noble; not plebeian.

PAT

- I see
Th' insulting tyrant prancing o'er the field,
His horse's hoofs wet with patrician blood! Addison.
PATRICIAN. n. f. A nobleman.
Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my cause with arms. Shakesp.
You'll find Gracchus, from patrician grown
A fencer aid the scandal of the town. Dryden.
Your daughters are all married to wealthy patricians. Swift.
PATRIMONIAL. adj. [patrimonial, Fr. from patrimonium.] Possessed by inheritance.
The expence of the duke of Ormond's own great patrimonial estate, that came over at that time, is of no small consideration in the stock of this kingdom. Temple.
Their patrimonial sloth the Spaniards keep,
And Philip first taught Philip how to sleep. Dryden.
PATRIMONY. n. f. [patrimonium, Latin; patrimoine, Fr.]
An estate possessed by inheritance.
Inclosures they would not forbid, for that had been to forbid the improvement of the patrimonies of the kingdom. Bacon.
So might the heir, whose father hath, in play,
Wasted a thousand pounds of ancient rent,
By painful earning of one groat a day,
Hope to restore the patrimonies spent. Davies.
In me all
Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony
That I must leave ye, sons. Milton's Par. Lost.
For his redemption, all my patrimony
I am ready to forego and quit. Milton's Agonista.
Their ships like wasted patrimonies flew;
Where the thin scattering trees admit the light,
And shun each other's shadows as they grow. Dryden.
The shepherd last appears,
And with him all his patrimony bears;
His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden.
PATRIOT. n. f. One whose ruling passion is the love of his country.
Patriots who for sacred freedom flood.
The firm patriot there,
Who made the welfare of mankind his care,
Shall know he conquer'd. Addison's Cato.
Here tears shall flow from a more gen'rous cause,
Such tears as patriots shed for dying laws. Pope.
PATRIOTISM. n. f. [from patriot.] Love of one's country;
zeal for one's country.
PATROCINATE. v. a. [patrocinor, Latin; patrocinor, old French.] To patronise; to protect; to defend. Ditt.
PATROL. n. f. [patrouille, patrouille, old French.]
1. The act of going the rounds in a garrison to observe that orders are kept.
2. Those that go the rounds.
O thou! by whose almighty nod the scale
Of empire rises, or alternate falls,
Send forth the saving virtues round the land
In bright patrol. Thomson's Summer.
PATROUILLER. v. n. [patrouiller, Fr.] To go the rounds in a camp or garrison.
These out guards of the mind are sent abroad
And still patrolling beat the neighbour road,
Or to the parts remote obedient fly,
Keep posts advanc'd, and on the frontier lie. Blackmore.
PATRON. n. f. [patron, Fr. patronus, Latin.]
1. One who countenances, supports or protects. Commonly a wretch who supports with insolence, and is paid with flattery.
I'll plead for you, as for my patron. Shakesp.
Ne'er let me pass in silence Dorset's name;
Ne'er cease to mention the continu'd debt,
Which the great patron only would forget. Prior.
2. A guardian saint.
Thou amongst those saints, whom thou do'st see,
Shall be a saint, and thine own nation's friend
And patron. Fairy Queen, b. i.
St. Michael is mentioned as the patron of the Jews, and is now taken by the Christians, as the protector general of our religion. Dryden.
3. Advocate; defender; vindicator.
We ate no patrons of those things; the best defence whereof is speedy redress and amendment. Hooker, b. ii. f. 1.
Whether the minds of men have naturally imprinted on them the ideas of extension and number, I leave to those who are the patrons of innate principles. Locke.
4. One who has donation of ecclesiastical preferment.
PATRONAGE. n. f. [from patron.]
1. Support; protection.
Lady, most worthy of all duty, how falls it out, that you, in whom all virtue shines, will take the patronage of fortune, the only rebellious handmaid against virtue. Sidney.
Here's patronage, and here our art decuries,
What breaks its bonds, what draws the cloister ties,
Shows what rewards our services may gain, Creech.
And how too often we may court in vain. 2. Guardianship

PAT

2. Guardianship of saints.
From certain passages of the poets, several ships made choice of some god or other for their guardians, as among the Roman Catholics every vessel is recommended to the patronage of some particular saint. Addison.
3. Donation of a benefice; right of conferring a benefice.
To PATRONAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To patronise; to protect. A bad word.
Dar'f't thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?
Yes, fir, as well as you dare patronage
The envious barking of your faucy tongue. Shakesp.
An out-law in a castle keeps,
And uses it to patronage his theft. Shakesp.
PATRONAL. adj. [from patronus, Lat.] Protecting; supporting; guarding; defending; doing the office of a patron:
The name of the city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PATRONESS. n. f. [feminine of patron; patrona, Lat.]
1. A female that defends, countenances or supports.
Of close escapes the aged patroness,
Blacker than earth, her sable mantle spread,
When with two trusty maids in great distress,
Both from mine uncle and my realm I fled. Fairfax.
All things should be guided by her direction, as the fove-reign patroness and protectress of the enterprise. Bacon.
Beside me night, best patroness of grief,
Over the pole thy thickest mantle throw. Milton.
He petitioned his patroness, who gave him for answer, that providence had assigned every bird its proportion. L'Estrange.
It was taken into the protection of my patronesses at court. Swift.
2. A female guardian saint.
To PATRONISE. v. a. [from patron.] To protect; to support; to defend; to countenance.
Churchmen are to be had in due respect for their work sake, and protected from scorn; but if a clergyman be loose and scandalous, he must not be patronised nor winked at. Bac.
All tenderness of conscience against good laws, is hypocrisy, and patronised by none but men of design, who look upon it as the fittest engine to get into power. South's Sermons.
I have been effeminated and patronised by the grandfather, the father and the son. Dryden.
PATRONYMICK. n. f. [πατρωνυμικός, patronymique, Fr.] Name expressing the name of the father or ancestor: as, Tydidēs, the son of Tydeus.
It ought to be rendered the son, Teslonides being a patronymick. Broom.
PATTEEN of a pillar. n. f. Its base. Ainsworth.
PATTEENMAKER. n. f. [patte and maker.] He that makes patteens.
PATTEEN. n. f. [patin, Fr.] A shoe of wood with an iron ring, worn under the common shoe by women to keep them from the dirt.
Their shoes and patteens are snouted and piked more than a finger long, crooking upwards, which they call crackowes, which were fastened to the knees with chains of gold and silver. Camden's Remains.
Good housewives
Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe through the wet on clinking patteens tread. Gay.
To PATTER. v. n. [from patte, Fr. the foot.] To make a noise like the quick steps of many feet.
Patter'ing hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in harden'd rain. Dryden.
The stealing shower is scarce to patter heard
By such as wander through the forest walks. Thomson.
PATTEEN. n. f. [patron, Fr. patroon, Dutch.]
1. The original proposed to imitation; the archetype; that which is to be copied; an exemplar.
As though your desire were, that the churches of old should be patterns for us to follow, and even glasses wherein we might see the practice of that which by you is gathered out of scripture. Hooker.
I will be the pattern of all patience;
I will say nothing. Shakesp. King Lear.
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
The example and pattern of the church of Rome. Claren.
Lose not the honour you have early won,
But stand the blameless pattern of a son. Dryden.
Measure the excellency of a virtuous mind; not as it is the copy, but the pattern of regal power.
This pattern should be our guide, in our present state of pilgrimage. Atterbury's Sermons.
Christianity commands us to act after a nobler pattern, than the virtues even of the most perfect men. Rogers.
Take pattern by our sister star,
Delude at once and bless our fight;
When you are seen, be seen from far,
And chiefly chuse to shine by night. Swift.

PAU

2. A specimen; a part shown as a sample of the rest.
A gentleman sends to my shop for a pattern of stuff; if he like it, he compares the pattern with the whole piece, and probably we bargain. Swift.
3. An instance; an example.
What God did command touching Canaan, the same con-cerneth not us otherwise than only as a fearful pattern of his just displeasure against sinful nations. Hooker, b. v. f. 17.
4. Any thing cut out in paper to direct the cutting of cloth.
To PATTERN. v. a. [patroner, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To make in imitation of something; to copy.
Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt, Shakesp.
Pattern'd by that the poet here describes.
2. To serve as an example to be followed. Neither sense is now much in use.
When I that censure him do so offend,
Let mine own judgment pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial. Shakesp.
PA'VAN. n. f. A kind of light tripping dance. Ainsf.
PA'VIN. n. f. [pauciloquium, Lat.] Sparing and rare speech. Ditt.
PAUCITY. [paucitas, from paucus, Latin.]
1. Fewness; smallness of number.
The multitude of parishes, and paucity of schools. Hooker.
In such slender corpuscles as those of colour, may easily be conceived a greater paucity of protuberant corpuscles. Boyle.
Socrates well understood what he said touching the rarity and paucity of friends. L'Estrange.
2. Smallness of quantity.
This paucity of blood is agreeable to many other animals:
as, lizzards, frogs and other fishes. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To PAVE. v. a. [pavio, Lat. paver, Fr.]
1. To lay with brick or stone; to floor with stone.
Should she kneel down,
Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horror. Shakesp.
Let not the court be paved, for that striketh up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter. Bacon.
From this chymic flame
I see a city of more precious mold,
With silver pav'd, and all divine with gold. Dryden.
The streets are paved with brick or freestone. Addison.
2. To make a passage easy.
It might open and pave a prepared way to his own title. Bac.
PA'VEMENT. n. f. [pavimentum, Lat.] Stones or bricks laid on the ground; stone floor.
The marble pavement clothes, he is enter'd Into his radiant roof. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars seen in the galaxy. Milton.
The long laborious pavement here he treads,
That to proud Rome th' admiring nations leads. Addison.
The foundation of Roman ways was made of rough stone joined together with cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of the lower stratum in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixed: for there can be no very durable pavement, but a double one. Arbutnot on Coins.
PA'VEY. n. f. [from pave.] One who lays with stones.
For thee the sturdy paver thumps the ground,
Whilst ev'ry stroke his lab'ring lungs resound. Gay.
PAVILION. n. f. [pavillon, French.] A tent; a temporary or moveable house.
Flowers being under the trees, the trees were to them a pavillion, and the flowers to the trees a mosaical floor. Sidney.
She did lie
In her pavilion, cloth of gold, of tissue. Shakesp.
He, only he, heaven's blew pavilion spreads,
And on the ocean's dancing billows treads. Sandy.
It was usual for the enemy, when there was a king in the field, to demand by a trumpet in what part of the camp he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion.
Addison's Freeholder, N° 23.
The glowing fury springs,
Once more invades the guilty dome, and shrouds
Its bright pavilions in a veil of clouds. Pope.
To PAVILION. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with tents.
Jacob in Mahanaim saw
The field pavilion'd with his guardians bright. Milton.
2. To be sheltered by a tent.
With his batt'ning flocks the careful swain
Abides pavilion'd on the grassy plain.
PAUNCH. n. f. [panse, French; panga, Spanish; panx, Latin.]
The belly; the region of the guts.
Demades, the orator, was talkative, and would eat hard;
Antipater would say of him, that he was like a sacrifice, that nothing was left of it but the tongue and the paunch. Bacon.

PAW

Pleading Matho born abroad for air,
With his fat paunch fills his new-fashion'd chair. Dryden
To PAUNCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To pierce or rip the belly; to exenterate; to take out the paunch; to eviscerate.
With a log
Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake. Shakeſp.
Chiron attack'd Talchibus with ſuch might,
One paſs had paunch'd the huge hydropick knight. Garth PAUPER. n. f. [Latin.] A poor perſon; one who receives alms.
PAUSE. n. f. [paufe, Fr. paufa, low Latin; παυση.]
1. A ſtop; a place or time of intermiſſion.
Neither could we ever come to any paufe, whereon to reſt our aſſurance this way. Hooker, b. ii. f. 4.
Comes a fellow crying out for help,
And Caſſio following with determin'd ſword,
To execute upon him; this gentleman
Steps in to Caſſio, and intreats his paufe. Shakeſp.
Some paufe and reſpite only I require,
Till with my tears I ſhall have quench'd my fire. Denham
The puniſhment muſt always be rigorouſly exacted, and the blows by paufes laid on till they reach the mind, and you perceive the ſigns of a true ſorrow. Locke Whilſt thoſe exalted to primeval light,
Only perceive ſome little paufe of joys
In thoſe great moments, when their god employs Their miniſtry. Prior
What paufe from woe, what hopes of comfort bring
The names of wife or great. Prior
Our diſcourſe is not kept up in converſation, but falls into more paufes and intervals than in our neighbouring countries. Addiſon's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 133.
2. Suſpenſe; doubt.
Like a man to double buſineſs bound,
I ſtand in paufe where I ſhall firſt begin,
And both neglect. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
3. Break; paragraph; apparent ſeparation of the parts of a diſcourſe.
He writes with warmth, which uſually neglects method, and thoſe partitions and paufes which men, educated in the ſchools, obſerve. Locke
4. Place of ſuſpending the voice marked in writing.
5. A ſtop or intermiſſion in muſic.
To PAUSE. v. n.
1. To wait; to ſtop; not to proceed; to forbear for a time.
Tarry; paufe a day or two,
Before you hazard: for in chuling wrong
I loſe your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakeſp.
Give me leave to read philoſophy.
And, while I paufe, ſerve in your harmony: Shakeſp.
Paufing a while, thus to herſelf the muſ'd. Milton
2. To deliberate.
Bear Worcester to death, and Vernon too.
Other offenders we will paufe upon. Shakeſp. Henry IV.
Solyma paufing a little upon the matter, the heat of his fury being over, ſuffered himſelf to be intreated. Kneller
3. To be intermitted.
What awe did the ſlow ſolemn knell inſpire,
The pealing organ, and the paufing choir,
And the laſt words, that duſt convey'd! Tickell
PAUSER. n. f. [from paufe.] He who paufes; he who deliberates.
The expedition of my violent love
Outruns the paufers, reaſon. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
PAW. n. f. [paufen, Welſh.]
1. The foot of a beaſt of prey.
One choſe his ground,
Whence ruſhing he might ſureſt ſeize them both Grip'd in each paw. Milton's Paradise Loſt.
The bee and ſerpent know their ſtings, and the bear the uſe of his paws. More's Antidote againſt Atheiſm.
If lions had been brought up to painting, where you have one lion under the feet of a man, you ſhould have had twenty men under the paw of a lion. L'Eſtrange
Each claims poſſeſſion,
Both their paws are faſtened on the prey. Dryden
2. Hand. In contempt.
Be civil to the wretch imploring,
And lay your paws upon him without roaring. Dryden
To PAW. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw the fore foot along the ground.
The fiery courſer, when he hears from far,
The ſprightly trumpets and the ſhouts of war,
Pricks up his ears, and trembling with delight that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon men. Bacon's Essay.

 Woods of oranges will smell into the sea perhaps twenty miles; but what is that, since a peal of ordnance will do as much, which moveth in a small compass? Bacon.
 A peal shall rouse their sleep;
 Then all thy faints assembled, thou shalt judge
 Bad men and angels. Mist. Par. Reg.
 I myself,
 Vanquish'd with a peal of words, O weakness;
 Gave up my fort of silence to a woman. Milton.
 From the Moors camp the noise grows louder still;
Peals of shouts that rend the heav'n's, Dryden.
 Oh! for a peal of thunder that would make Earth, sea and air, and heaven and Cato tremble! Addis.
 2. It is once used by Shakespeare for a loud noise, but improperly.
 Ere to black Hecat's summons
 The hard-born beetle with his drowny hums,
 Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
 A deed of dreadful note. Shakef. Macbeth.
 To PEAL. v. n. [from the noun.] To play solemnly and loud.
 Let the pealing organ blow,
 To the full-voic'd quire below,
 In service high and anthems clear,
 As may with sweetness through mine ear,
 Dissolve me into extasies,
 And bring all heav'n before my eyes. Milton.
 The pealing organ, and the pausing choir;
 And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd. Tichell.
 To PEAL. v. a.
 1. To assail with noise.
 Nor was his ear less peal'd
 With noises loud and ruinous, than when Bellona storms,
 With all her batt'ring engines bent to rafe
 Some capital city. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 2. To stir with some agitation: as, to peal the pot, is when it boils to stir the liquor therein with a ladle. Ainsl.

PEC

PECCANCY. n. f. [from peccant.] Bad quality.
Apply refrigerants without any preceding evacuation, because the disease took its original merely from the disaffection of the part, and not from the peccancy of the humours. Wifem.

PECCANT. adj. [peccant, Fr. peccant, Latin.]

1. Guilty; criminal.

From them I will not hide
My judgments, how with mankind I proceed;
As how with peccant angels late they saw. Milton.
That such a peccant creature should disapprove and repent of every violation of the rules of just and honest, this right reason could not but infer. South's Sermons.

2. Ill disposed; corrupt; bad; offensive to the body; injurious to health. It is chiefly used in medical writers.

With laxatives preserve your body sound,
And purge the peccant humours that abound. Dryden.
Such as have the bile peccant or deficient are relieved by bitters, which are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbutnot.

3. Wrong; bad; deficient; informal.

Nor is the party cited bound to appear, if the citation be peccant in form or matter. Ayliffe's Parergon.

PECK. n. f. [from pocca, or perhaps from pat, a vessel. Skinner.

1. The fourth part of a bushel.

Burn our vessels, like a new Seal'd peck or bushel, for being true. Hudibras.
To every hill of ashes, some put a peck of unslack'd lime, which they cover with the ashes till rain slack the lime, and then they spread them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

He drove about his turnips in a cart;
And from the same machine fold pecks of pease. King.

2. Proverbially. [In low language.] A great deal.

Her finger was so small, the ring
Would not stay on which they did bring;
It was too wide a peck;
It look'd like the great collar just About our young colt's neck. Suckling.

TO PECK. v. a. [becquer, French; picken, Dutch.]

1. To strike with the beak as a bird.
2. To pick up food with the beak.

She was his only joy, and he her pride,
She, when he walk'd, went pecking by his side. Dryden.
Can any thing be more surprising, than to consider Cicero observing, with a religious attention, after what manner the chickens pecked the grains of corn thrown them. Addison.

3. To strike with any pointed instrument.

With a pick-axe of iron about sixteen inches long, sharpened at the one end to peck, and flat headed at the other to drive little iron wedges to cleave rocks. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

4. To strike; to make blows.

Two contrary factions, both inveterate enemies of our church, which they are perpetually pecking and striking at with the same malice. South's Sermons.
They will make head against a common enemy, whereas mankind lie pecking at one another, till they are torn to pieces. L'Estrange.

PECULATOR. [Latin.] Robber of the publick.

PECULIAR. adj. [peculiaris, from peculum, Lat. pecule, Fr.]

1. Appropriate; belonging to any one with exclusion of others.

I agree with Sir William Temple, that the word humour is peculiar to our English tongue; but not that the thing itself is peculiar to the English, because the contrary may be found in many Spanish, Italian and French productions. Swift.

2. Not common to other things.

PED

The only sacred hymns they are that christianity hath peculiar unto itself, the other being songs too of praise and of thanksgiving, but songs wherewith as we serve God, so the Jews likewise. Hooker, b. v. f. 39.

Space and duration being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may be of use for their illustration. Locke.

3. Particular; single. To join ped with peculiar, though found in Dryden, is improper.

One peculiar nation to select From all the rest, of whom to be invoc'd. Milton.
I neither fear, nor will provoke the war;
My fate is Juno's most peculiar care. Dryden.

PECULIAR. n. f.

1. The property; the exclusive property.

By tincture or reflection, they augment Their small peculiar. Milt. Par. Lost.

To his proud pedant, or declin'd a noun. Dryden.

2. A man vain of low knowledge; a man awkwardly ostentatious of his literature.

The pedant can hear nothing but in favour of the conceits he is amorous of. Glanville.
The preface has so much of the pedant, and so little of the conversation of men in it, that I shall pass it over. Addison.

In learning let a nymph delight,
The pedant gets a mistress by't. Swift.

PEDANTIC. adj. [pedantique, Fr. from pedant.] Awk-

PEDANTICAL. n. f. wardly ostentatious of learning.

Mr. Cheeke had eloquence in the Latin and Greek tongues; but for other sufficiencies pedantick enough. Hayward.

When we see any thing in an old satyrift, that looks forced and pedantick, we ought to consider how it appeared in the time the poet writ. Addison.

The obscurity is brought over them by ignorance and age, made yet more obscure by their pedantical elucidators. Felton.

A spirit

PEE

A spirit of contradiction is so pedantic and hateful, that a man should watch against every instance of it. Watts.

We now believe the Copernican system; yet we shall still use the popular terms of sun-rise and sun-set, and not introduce a new pedantick description of them from the motion of the earth. Boutley's Sermons.

PEDANTICALLY. adv. [from pedantical.] With awkward ostentation of literature.

The earl of Roscommon has excellently rendered it; too faithfully is, indeed, pedantically; 'tis a faith like that, which proceeds from superstition. Dryden.

PEDANTRY. n. f. [pedanterie, Fr.] Awkward ostentation of needless learning.

'Tis a practice that favours much of pedantry, a reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school. Brown.

Horace has enticed me into this pedantry of quotation. Cowley.
Make us believe it, if you can: it is in Latin, if I may be allowed the pedantry of a quotation, non persuadebis, etiam si perijuresis. Addison's Freeholder.

From the universities the young nobility are sent for fear of contracting any airs of pedantry by a college education. Swift.

The caule of the holding green, is the clove and compact substance of their leaves and pedicles. Bacon.

PEDICULAR. adj. [pedicularis, Lat. pediculaire, Fr.] Having the phryriasis or lousy distemper. Ainsworth.

PEDIGREE. n. f. [perre and degre, Skinner.] Genealogy; lineage; account of descent.

I am no herald to enquire of men's pedigrees, it sufficeth me if I know their virtues. Sidney.

You tell a pedigree

Of three score and two years, a silly time. Shakespeare.
Alterations of surnames, which in former ages have been very common, have obscured the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce many of them. Cam.

To the old heroes hence was giv'n
A pedigree which reach'd to heav'n. Waller.

The Jews preserved the pedigrees of their several tribes, with a more scrupulous exactness than any other nation. Atter.

PEDIMENT. n. f. [pedis, Lat.] In architecture, an ornament that crowns the ordonances, finishes the fronts of buildings, and serves as a decoration over gates, windows and niches: it is ordinarily of a triangular form, but sometimes makes the arch of a circle. Diät.

PEDLER. n. f. [a petty dealer; a contraction produced by frequent use.] One who travels the country with small commodities.

All as a poor pedler he did wend,
Bearing a truss of trifles at his back;
As bells and babies and glasses in his pack. Spenser.
If you did but hear the pedler at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe. Shakespeare.
He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wassals, meetings, markets, fairs. Shakesp.
Had fly Ulysses at the sack
Of Troy brought thee his pedler's pack. Cleaveland.
A narrow education may beget among some of the clergy in possession just contempt for all innovators, as merchants have for pedlers. Swift.

Atlas was so exceeding strong,
He bore the skies upon his back,
Just as a pedler does his pack. Swift.

PEDLERY. adj. [from pedler.] Wares sold by pedlers.

The sufferings of those of my rank are trifles in comparison of what all those who travel with fish, poultry, pedlery ware to fall. Swift.

PEDDLING. adj. Petty dealing; such as pedlers have.

So slight a pleasure I may part with, and find no mis; in this peddling profit I may resign, and 'twill be no breach in my estate. Decay of Piety.

PEDOBAPTISM. n. f. [παιδός and βάπτισμα.] Infant baptism.

PEDOBAPTIST. n. f. [παιδός and βαπτιστής.] One that holds or practices infant baptism.

PEE

TO PEE. v. a. [peeler, Fr. from pellis.]

1. To decorticate; to flay.

The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,
And stuck them up before the fallow ewes. Shakesp.

2. [From pillar, to rob.] To plunder. According to analogy this should be written pill.

Who once jilt and temp'rate conquer'd well,
But govern ill the nations under yoke,
Peeling their provinces, exhausted all But lust and rapine. Milton's Paradise Regained.
Lord-like at ease, with arbitrary pow'r,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour;
These, traitor, are thy talents. Dryden.

PEEL. n. f. [pellis, Latin; pelure, French.] The skin or thin rind of any thing.

PEEL. n. f. [paelle, Fr.] A broad thin board with a long handle, used by bakers to put their bread in and out of the oven.

PEELER. n. f. [from peel.]

1. One who strips or flays.
2. A robber; a plunderer.

Yet otes with her sucking a peeler is found,
Both ill to the mailster and worse to some ground. Tusser.

As 'tis a peeler of land, sow it upon lands that are rank. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO PEEP. v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derives it from opbeffen, Dutch, to lift up; and of Casaubon, who derives it from opbeffen, a spy; perhaps it may come from pip, pipio, Latin, to cry as young birds: when the chickens first broke the shell and cried, they were said to begin to pip or peep; and the word that expressed the act of crying, was by mistake applied to the act of appearing that was at the same time: this is offered till something better may be found.]

1. To make the first appearance.

She her gay painted plumes disordered,
Seeing at last herself from danger rid,
Peeps forth and soon renews her native pride. Fa. Queen.
Your youth
And the true blood, which peeps forth fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an unfain'd shepherd. Shakesp.
England and France might through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league;
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
I can see his pride
Peep through each part of him. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
The timorous maiden-blossoms on each bough
Peep forth from their first blushes; so that now
A thousand ruddy hopes smil'd in each bud;
And flatter'd every greedy eye that stood. Crashaw.
With words not hers, and more than human found,
She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

Earth, but not at once, her visage rears;
And peeps upon the seas from upper grounds. Dryden.
Fair as the face of nature did appear,
When flowers first peep'd, and trees did blossoms bear, }
And winter had not yet deform'd th' inverted year. Dryd. } Printing and letters had just peeped abroad in the world; and the restorers of learning wrote very eagerly against one another. Atterbury.

Though but the very white end of the sprout peep out in the outward part of the couch, break it open, you will find the sprout of a greater largeness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last;
But those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;
Th' increasing prospect tires our wand'ring eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise. Pope.
Most souls but peep out once an age,
Dull fullen pri'sners in the body's cage. Pope.

2. To look slyly, closely or curiously; to look through any crevice.

Who is the fame, which at my window peeps. Spenser.

Come thick night!
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakesp.
A fool will peep in at the door. Ecclus. xxi. 23.
The trembling leaves through which he play'd,
Dappling the walk with light and shade,
Like lattice-windows give the spy
Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleaveland.
All doors are shut, no servant peeps abroad,
While others outward went on quick dispatch. Dryden.

The

PEE

The daring flames peep in, and faw from far
The awful beauties of the sacred quire;
But since it was prophand by civil war,
Heav'n thought it fit to have it purg'd by fire. Dryden.

From each tree
The feather'd people look down to peep on me. Dryden.
Those remote and vast bodies were formed not merely to be peep at through an optick glass. Bentley's Sermons.
O my mule, just distance keep;
Thou art a maid, and must not peep. Prior.
In vain his little children peeping out Into the mingling storm, demand their fire. Thomson.

PEEP. n. f.
1. First appearance: as, at the peep and first break of day.
2. A fly look.
Would not one think, the almanackmaker was crept out of his grave to take t' other peep at the stars. Swift.
PEEPER. n. f. Young chickens just breaking the shell.
Dishes I chafe, though little, yet genteel;
Snails the first course, and peepers crown the meal. Bramst.
PEEPHOLE. n. f. [peep and hole.] Hole through which PEEPINGHOLE. n. f. one may look without being discovered.
By the peepholes in his crest,
Is it not virtually confest,
That there his eyes took distant aim. Prior.
The fox spied him through a peepinghole he had found out to see what news. L'Estrange.

PEER. n. f. [pair, French.]
1. Equal; one of the same rank.
His peers upon this evidence
Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakefp.
Amongst a man's peers, a man shall be sure of familiarity;
and therefore it is good a little to keep state. Bacon.
Oh! what is man, great maker of mankind!
That thou to him so great respect do'st bear!
That thou adorn'st him with so bright a mind,
Mak'st him a king, and ev'n an angel's peer. Davies.

2. One equal in excellence or endowments.
In song he never had his peer,
From sweet Cecilia down to chanticleer. Dryden.

3. Companion: fellow.
He all his peers in beauty did surpass. Fairy Queen.
If you did move to-night,
In the dances, with what flight
Of your peers you were beheld,
That at every motion swell'd. Benj. Johnson.
Who bear the bows were knights in Arthur's reign,
Twelve they, and twelve the peers of Charlemagne. Dryd.

4. A nobleman: of nobility we have five degrees, who are all nevertheless called peers, because their essential privileges are the same.
I see thee compact with thy kingdom's peers,
That speak my salutation in their minds:
Hail king of Scotland! Shakefp. Macbeth.
King Henry's peers and chief nobility Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France. Shakef.
Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

TO PEE. v. n. [By contraction from appear.]
1. To come just in sight.
As the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,
So honour peereth in the meanest habit. Bacon.
Yet a many of your horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field. Shakefp. Henry V.
Ev'n through the hollow eyes of death
I spy life peering. Shakefp.
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben. Johnson.
Hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansion to the peering day. Milt.

2. To look narrowly; to peep.
Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer,
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move,
Now the ambitious lark with mirror clear
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidn.
Peering in maps for ports, and peers, and roads,
And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.

PEERAGE. n. f. [patrie, Fr. from peer.]
1. The dignity of a peer.
His friendships he to few confin'd;
No fools of rank or mongrel breed,
Who fain would pass for Lords indeed;
Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither'd flower. Swift.

2. The body of peers.
Not only the penal laws are in force against papists, and their number is contemptible, but also the peerage and commons are excluded from parliament. Dryden.

PEERDOM. n. f. [from peer.] Peerage. Ainsworth.
PEERLESS. n. f. [female of peer.] The lady of a peer; a woman ennobled.

PEG

Statesman and patriot ply alike the stocks;
Peers and butler share alike the box. Pope.

PEERLESS. adj. [from peer.] Unequalled; having no peer.
I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weat,
We stand up peerless. Shakefp.

You,
So perfect, and so peerless, are created
Of every creature's best. Shakefp. Tempest.
Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king. Shakefp.
Hesperus, that led
The starry host, rode brightest; till the moon,
Rising in clouded majesty, at length,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton.
Such music worthiest were to blaze
The peerless light of her immortal praise, Whole lullie leads us. Milton.
Her dress, her shape, her matchless grace,
Were all observ'd, as well as heav'nly face;
With such a peerless majesty the stands,
As in that day she took the crown. Dryden.

PEERLESSNESS. n. f. [from peerless.] Universal superiority.
PEEVISH. adj. [This word Junius, with more reason than he commonly discovers, supposes to be formed by corruption from perverse; Skinner rather derives it from beeish, as we lay wasps.] Petulant; waspish; easily offended; irritable; iracible; soon angry; perverse; morose; querulous; full of expressions of discontent; hard to please.
For what can breed more peevish incongruities,
Than man to yield to female lamentations. Sidney.
She is peevish, fullen, froward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty. Shakefp.
If thou hast the metal of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peevish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls. Shakefp.
I will not presume
To send such peevish tokens to a king. Shakefp.
Those deserve to be doubly laugh'd at, that are peevish and angry for nothing to no purpose. L'Estrange.
Neither will it be fatire or peevish invective to affirm, that infidelity and vice are not much diminished. Swift.

PEEVISHLY. adv. [from peevish.] Angrily; querulously; morosely.
He was so peevishly opiniative and proud, that he would neither alk nor hear the advice of any. Hayward.

PEEVISHNESS. n. f. [from peevish.] Irrascibility; querulous-ness; fretfulness; perverseness.
Some miscarriages in government might escape through the peevishness of others, envying the publick should be managed without them. King Charles.
It will be an unpardonable, as well as childish peevishness, if we undervalue the advantages of our knowledge, and neglect to improve it. Locke.

You may find
Nothing but acid left behind:
From passion you may then be freed,
When peevishness and spleen succeed. Swift.

PEG. n. f. [pegge, Teutonic.]
1. A piece of wood driven into a hole, which does the office of an iron nail.
Solid bodies foreflew rain; as boxes and pegs of wood, when they draw and wind hard. Bacon.
The teeth are about thirty in each jaw; all of them claviculares or peg teeth, not much unlike the tusks of a mastiff.
Grew's Anatomy.

If he pretends to be cholerick, we shall treat him like his little friend Dicky, and hang him upon a peg till he comes to himself. Addison's Guardian, N° 108.
The pegs and nails in a great building, though they are but little valued in themselves, are absolutely necessary to keep the whole frame together. Addison's Spectator.
A finer petticoat can neither make you richer, more vir-tuous or wife, than if it hung upon a peg. Swift.

2. The pins of an instrument in which the strings are strained.
You are well tun'd now; but I'll let down
The pegs that make this music. Shakefp. Othello.

3. To take a peg lover; to depress; to sink: perhaps from relaxing the cords of musical instruments.
Remember how in arms and politics,
We still have work'd all your holy tricks,
Trepann'd your party with intrigue,
And took your grandees down a peg. Hudibras.

4. The nickname of Margaret.
TO PEG. v. a. To fasten with a peg.
I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, 'till Thou'st howl'd away twelve winters. Shakefp. Tempest.
Taking the shoots of the past spring, and pegging them down in very rich earth, by that time twelvemonth they will be ready to remove.  Evelyn's Kalendar.

PEL

PELF. n. f. [In low Latin, peltra, not known whence derived;
pelisse, in Norman, is frisquetry.] Money; riches.
The thought of this doth pass all worldly pel. Sidney.

Hardy elf,
Thou dar'st view my direful countenance,
I read thee rash and heedless of thyself,
To trouble my still seat and heaps of precious pel. Fairy Queen.

Immortal gods, I crave no pel;
I pray for no man but myself.
He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pel
Soon split him on the former self:
He put it out again. Dryden's Horace.
To the poor if he refus'd his pel,
He us'd them full as kindly as himself. Swift.

PELLICAN. n. f. [pelicanus, low Lat. pellican, Fr.]
There are two sorts of pelicans; one lives upon the water and feeds upon fish; the other keeps in deserts, and feeds upon serpents and other reptiles: the pelican has a peculiar tenderness for its young; it generally places its nest upon a craggy rock: the pelican is supposed to admit its young to suck blood from its breast. Calmat.

Should discarded fathers
Have this little mercy on their flesh;
'Twas this flesh begot those pelican daughters. Shakefp.
The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, like the sice of apothecaries. Hakewill on Providence.

PELLET. n. f. [from pila, Lat. pelote, Fr.]
1. A little ball.
That which is fold to the merchants, is made into little pellets, and sealed. Sandys.
I dress'd with little pellets of lint. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. A bullet; a ball.
The force of gunpowder hath been ascribed to rarefaction of the earthy substance into flame, and so followeth a dilatation; and therefore, left two bodies should be in one place, there must needs also follow an expulsion of the pellet or blowing up of the mine: but these are ignorant speculations; for flame, if there were nothing else, will be suffocated with any hard body, such as a pellet is, or the barrel of a gun; so as the hard body would kill the flame. Bacon.
A cube or pellet of yellow wax as much as half the spirit of wine, burnt only eighty-seven pulses. Bacon.
How shall they reach us in the air with those pellets they can hardly roll upon the ground. L'Estrange.
In a shooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the more forcibly the air passes and drives the pellet. Ray.

PELLETED. adj. [from pellet.] Consisting of bullets.
My brave Egyptians all,
By the disbanding of this pelleted storm, Lie graveless. Shakefp. Macbeth.

PELLICLE. n. f. [pellicula, Lat.]
1. A thin skin.
After the discharge of the fluid, the pellicle must be broke.
Sharp's Surgery.

2. It is often used for the film which gathers upon liquors impregnated with salts or other substances, and evaporated by heat.

PELLITORY. n. f. [parietaria, Lat.] An herb.
The pellitory hath an apetalous flower, whose flower cup is divided into four parts, which is sometimes bell-shaped like a funnel, with four stamina or threads surrounding the pointal, which becomes for the most part an oblong seed, surrounded by the flower cup; to which may be added, the flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves. Miller.

PELLEL. n. f. [pelles melle, Fr.] Confusedly; tumultuously;
one among another.
When we have dash'd them to the ground,
Then desic each other; and pell mell
Make yet upon ourselves. Shakefp. King John.
Never yet did insurrection want
Such moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pell mell havock and confusion.
He knew when to fall on pell mell,
To fall back and retreat as well. Hudibras.

PELLS. n. f. [pellis, Lat.]
Clerk of the pellis, an officer belonging to the exchequer, who enters every teller's bill into a parchment roll called pellis acceptorum, the roll of receipts; and also makes another roll called pellis exituum, a roll of the disbursements. Bailey.

PELLUCID. adj. [pellucidus, Lat.] Clear; transparent; not opaque; not dark.
The colours are owing to the intermixture of foreign matter with the proper matter of the stone: this is the case of agates and other coloured stones, the colours of several whereof may be extracted, and the bodies rendered as pellucid as crystal, without sensibly damaging the texture. Woodward.
If water be made warm in any pellucid vessel emptied of air, the water in the vacuum will bubble and boil as vehement as it would in the open air in a vessel set upon the fire, till it conceives a much greater heat. Newton's Opticks.

PEN

PELLUCIDITY. n. f. [from pellucid.] Transparency; clear-PELLUCIDNESS. n. f. [from pellucid.] Transparency; clearness; not opacity.
The air is a clear and pellucid menstruum, in which the infensible particles of dissolved matter float, without troubling the pellucidity of the air; when on a sudden by a precipitation they gather into visible misty drops that make clouds. Locke.
We consider their pellucidness and the vast quantity of light, that passes through them without reflection. Keil.

PELT. n. f. [from peltis, Lat.]
1. Skin; hide.
The camels hair is taken for the skin or pelt with the hair upon it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick,
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick. Dryden.

2. The quarry of a hawk all torn. Ainsworth.

PELT-MONGER. n. f. [pellis, Lat. pelt and monger.] A dealer in raw hides.
TO PELT. v. a. [peltern, German, Skinner; contracted from pellet, Mr. Lye.] It is generally used of something thrown, rather with teasing frequency than destructive violence.
1. To strike with something thrown.
Poor naked wretches whereof'er you are
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you. Shakefp.
Do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shakefp.
No zealous brother there would want a stone
To maul us cardinals, and pelt pope Joan. Dryden.
Obscure persons have insulted men of great worth, and pelting them from coverts with little objections. Atterbury.
The whole empire could hardly subdue me, and I might easily with stones pelt the metropolis to pieces. Gulliver.

2. To throw; to cast.
My Phillis me with pelting apples plies,
Then tripping to the woods the wanton hies. Dryden.

PELTING. adj. This word in Shakespeare signifies, I know not why, mean; paltry; pitiful.
Could great men thunder, Jove could ne'er be quiet;
For every pelting petty officer
Would use his heav'n for thunder. Shakefp. Macbeth.
Fogs falling in the land,
Have every pelting river made so proud,
That they have overborn their continents. Shakefp.
They from sheepcotes and poor pelting villages Enforce their charity. Shakefp.
A tenement or pelting farm. Shakefp.

PELVIS. n. f. [Latin.] The lower part of the belly.
PEN. n. f. [penna, Latin.]
1. An instrument of writing.
Never durst poet touch a pen to write,
Until his ink were temper'd with love's sighs. Shakefp.
Eternal deities!
Who write whatever time shall bring to pass,
With pens of Adamant on plates of brass. Dryden.
He takes the papers, lays them down again;
And, with unwilling fingers, tries the pen. Dryden.
I can, by designing the letters, tell what new idea it shall exhibit the next moment, barely by drawing my pen over it, which will neither appear, if my hands stand still; or though I move my pens, if my eyes be shut. Locke.

2. Feather.
The pens that did his pinnions bind,
Were like main-yards with flying canvas lin'd. Fairy Queen.

3. Wing; though even here it may mean feather.
Feather'd foon and fledg'd,
Thy humm'd their pens; and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. [From penna, Saxon.] A small inclosure; a coop.
My father stole two geese out of a pen. Shakefp.
The cook was ordered to dress capons for supper, and take the best in the pen. L'Estrange.
She in pen his flocks will fold. Dryden's Horace.
Ducks in thy ponds, and chickens in thy pens,
And be thy turkeys num'rous as thy hens. King.
The gather'd flocks
Are in the wattled pen innumerable prest'd, Head above head. Thomson's Summer.

TO PEN. v. a. [pennan and pinban, Saxon.]
1. To coop; to shut up; to incage; to imprison in a narrow place.
Away with her,
And pen her up. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
My heavy son
Private in his chamber pens himself. Shakefp.
The plaster alone would pen the humour already contained in the part, and forbid new humour. Bacon.
As when a prowling wolf,
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey,
Watching where shepherds pen their flocks at eve

In hurdled cotes, amid the field secure Leaps o'er the fence with ease into the fold. Milton.
The glass, wherein it is *pen*ned up, hinders it to deliver itself by an expansion of its parts. Boyle.
The prevention of mischief is prescribed by the Jewish custom; they pen up their daughters, and permit them to be acquainted with none. Harvey on Consumptions.
Ah! that your bus'ness had been mine,
To pen the sheep. Dryden.
2. [From the noun.] To write. It probably meant at first only the manual exercise of the pen, or mechanical part of writing; but it has been long used with relation to the stile or composition.
For prey these shepherds two he took,
Whose metal stiff he knew he could not bend
With hearfay pictures, or a window look,
With one good dance or letter finely pen'd. Sidney.
I would be loth to cast away my speech; for, besides that it is excellently well pen'd, I have taken great pains to con
it. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Read this challenge, mark but the penning of it. Shakespeare.
A sentence spoken by him in English, and *pen*ned out of his mouth by four good secretaries, for trial of our orthogra phy, was set down by them. Camden's Remains.
He frequented sermons, and *pen*ned notes with his own hand. Hayward on Edward VI.
The digesting my thoughts into order, and the setting them down in writing was necessary; for without such strict exa mination, as the penning them affords, they would have been disjointed and roving ones. Digby on the Soul.
Almost condemn'd, he mov'd the judges thus:
Hear, but instead of me, my Oedipus;
The judges hearing with applause, at th' end Freed him, and said, no fool such lines had pen'd. Denb.
Gentlemen should extempore, or after a little meditation, speak to some subject without penning of any thing. Locke.
Should I publish the praises that are so well pen'd, they would do honour to the persons who write them. Addison.
Twenty fools I never saw Come with petitions fairly pen'd,
Desiring I should stand their friend. Swift.
PENAL. adj. [penal, Fr. from pæna, Lat.]
1. Denouncing punishment; enacting punishment.
Gratitude plants such generosity in the heart of man, as shall more effectually incline him to what is brave and be coming than the terror of any penal law. South.
2. Used for the purposes of punishment; vindictive.
Adamantive chains and penal fire. Milton.
PENALTY. n. f. [from penalité, old French.]
1. Punishment; censure; judicial infliction.
Many of the ancients denied the Antipodes, and some unto the penalty of contrary affirmations; but the experience of na vigations, can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown.
Political power is a right of making laws with penalties of death, and consequently all less penalties, for preserving pro perty, and employing the force of the community in the exe cution of laws. Locke.
Beneath her footstool, science groans in chains,
And wit dreads exile, penalties and pains. Dunciad.
2. Forfeiture upon non-performance.
Lend this money, not as to thy friend,
But lend it rather to thine enemy,
Who, if he break, thou may'st with better face Exact the penalty. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
PENANCE. n. f. [penence, old French; for penitence.] In fiction either public or private, suffered as an expression of repentance for sin.
And bitter penance, with an iron whip,
Was wont him once to discipline every day. Fairy Queen.
Mew her up,
And make her bear the penance of her tongue. Shakespeare.
No penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never so straight penance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over the pursuit of his right. Bacon.
The scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour Calls us to penance. Milton's Paradise Lost.
A Lorain surgeon, who whipped the naked part with a great rod of nettles till all over blistered, persuaded him to per form this penance in a sharp fit he had. Temple.
PENCE. n. f. The plural of penny; formed from penites, by a contraction usual in the rapidity of colloquial speech.
The same servant found one of his fellow servants, which owed him an hundred pence, and took him by the throat. Mat.
PENICIL. n. f. [penicillum, Latin.]
1. A small brush of hair which painters dip in their colours.
*Pen*cils can by one slight touch restore Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden.
For thee the groves green liv'ries wear,
For thee the grasses lead the dancing hours,
And nature's ready *pen*cil paints the flow'rs. Dryden.

PEN

A sort of pictures there is, wherein the colours, as laid by the *pen*cil on the table, mark out very odd figures. Locke.
The faithful *pen*cil has design'd
Some bright idea of the master's mind,
Where a new world leaps out at his command,
And ready nature waits upon his hand. Pope.
One dips the *pen*cil, t' other strings the lyre. Pope.
2. A black lead pen, with which cut to a point they write with out ink.
Mark with a pen or *pen*cil the most considerable things in the books you desire to remember. Watts.
3. Any instrument of writing without ink.
To PENICIL. v. n. [from the noun.] To paint.
Painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour trafficks with man's nature,
He is but outside: *pen*cil'd figures are Ev'n such as they give out. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
PENDANT. n. f. [pendant, French.]
1. A jewel hanging in the ear.
The spirits
Some third the mazy ringlets of her hair,
Some hang upon the pendants of her ear. Pope.
2. Any thing hanging by way of ornament.
Unripe fruit, whose verdant stalks do cleave
Close to the tree, which grieves no less to leave
The smiling pendant which adorns her so,
And until Autumn, on the bough should grow. Waller.
3. A pendulum. Obsolete.
To make the same pendant go twice as fast as it did, or make every undulation of it in half the time it did, make the line, at which it hangs, double in geometrical proportion to the line at which it hang'd before. Digby on the Soul.
4. A small flag in ships.
To make the same pendant go twice as fast as it did, or make every undulation of it in half the time it did, make the line, at which it hangs, double in geometrical proportion to the line at which it hang'd before. Digby on the Soul.
PENDENCE. n. f. [from pendeo, Lat.] Slopeness; inclination.
The Italians give the cover a graceful pendence or slope ness, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest top or ridge from the lowest. Wotton's Architecture.
PENDENCY. n. f. [from pendeo, Lat.] Suspense; delay of decision.
The judge shall pronounce in the principal cause, nor can the appellant allege pendency of suit. Ayliffe.
PENDENT. adj. [pendens, Latin; some write pendant, from the French.]
1. Hanging.
Quaint in green she shall be loose enrob'd
With ribbons pendent, flaring 'bout her head. Shakespeare.
I sometimes mournful verse indite, and sing
Of desperate lady near a purling stream,
Or lover pendent on a willow tree. Phillips.
2. Jutting over.
A pendent rock,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air. Shakespeare.
3. Supported above the ground.
They brought, by wondrous art
Pontifical, a ridge of pendent rock
Over the vex'd abyss. Milton's Paradise Lost.
PENDING. n. f. [pendente, Lat.] Depending; remaining yet undecided.
A person pending suit with the diocesan, shall be defended in the possession. Ayliffe.
PENDULOSITY. n. f. [from pendulous.] The state of hang ing; suspension.
His slender legs he encreased by riding, that is, the humours descended upon their pendulosity, having no support or sup pendaneous stability. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PENDULOUS. adj. [pendulus, Lat.] Hanging; not sup ported below.
All the plagues, that in the pendulous air
Hang fated o'er men's faults, light on thy daughters. Shakespeare.
Bellerophon's horse, fram'd of iron, and placed between the two loadstones with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The grinders are furnished with three roots, and in the upper jaw often four, because these are pendulous. Ray.
PENDULUM. n. f. [pendulus, Lat. pendule, Fr.] Any weight hung so as that it may easily swing backwards and forwards, of which the great law is, that its oscillations are always performed in equal time.
Upon the bench I will to handle 'em,
That the vibration of this pendulum
Shall make all taylor's yards of one Unanimous opinion. Hudibras.
PENETRABLE. adj. [penetrabilis, Fr. penetrabilis, Latin.]
1. Such as may be pierced; such as may admit the entrance of another body.
Let him try thy dart,
And pierce his only penetrable part. Dryden.
2. Susceptive of moral or intellectual impression.
I am not made of stone,
But penetrable to your kind entreaties. Shakespeare.
Peace,
And let me wring your heart, for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
PENETRABILITY. n. f. [from penetrabilis.] Susceptibility of impression from another body.
There being no mean between penetrability and impenetra bility, passivity and activity, they being contrary; therefore the infinite rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Boyle's Philosophical Principles.
PENETRANT. n. f. [penetrantia, Latin.] Interior parts. Not in use.
The heart resists purulent fumes, into whose penetrants to infiltrate some time must be allowed. Harvey.
PENETRANCY. n. f. [from penetrant.] Power of entering or piercing.
The subtilty, activity and penetrancy of its effluvia no ob stacle can stop or repel, but they will make their way through all bodies. Ray on the Creation.
PENETRANT. adj. [penetrant, Fr.] Having the power to pierce or enter; sharp; subtle.
If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses pro moted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle.
The food, mingled with some dissolvent juices, is evacuated into the intestines, where it is further subtilized and rendered so fluid and penetrant, that the finer part finds its way in at the freight orifices of the lacteous veins. Ray.
To PENETRATE. v. a. penetre, Lat. penetrare, Fr.]
1. To pierce; to enter beyond the surface; to make way into a body.
Marrow is, of all other oily substances, the most penetra ting. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. To affect the mind.
3. To reach the meaning.
To PENETRATE. v. n. To make way.
There shall we clearly see the uses of these things, which here were too subtle for us to penetrate. Ray.
If we reached no farther than metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing. Locke.
PENETRATION. n. f. [penetration, Fr. from penetrare.]
1. The act of entering into any body.
It warms
The universe, and to each inward part
With gentle penetration though unseen Shoots invisible virtue even to the deep. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. Mental entrance into any thing abstruse.
A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of mo dern algebra and fluxions, is not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.
3. Acuteness; sagacity.
The proudest admirer of his own parts might consult with others, though of inferior capacity and penetration. Watts.
PENETRATIVE. adj. [from penetrare.]
1. Piercing; sharp; subtle.
Let not air be too gross, nor too penetrative, nor subject to any foggy noisomeness from fens. Watson.
2. Acute; sagacious; discerning.
O thou, whose penetrative wisdom found
The fourth sea rocks and shelves, where thousands drown'd.
Swift's Miscellanies.
3. Having the power to impress the mind.
Wouldst thou see
Thy master thus with pleach arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd To penetrative shame. Shakespeare.
PENETRATIVENESS. n. f. [from penetrative.] The quality of being penetrative.
PENGUIN. n. f. [anser magellanicus, Latin.]
1. A bird. This bird was found with this name, as is sup posed, by the first discoverers of America; and penguin signi fying in Welsh a white head, and the head of this fowl being white, it has been imagined, that America was peopled from Wales; whence Hudibras:
British Indians nam'd from penguins.
Grew gives another account of the name, deriving it from punguis, Lat. fat; but is, I believe, mistaken.
The penguin is so called from his extraordinary fatness:
for though he be no higher than a large goose, yet he weighs sometimes sixteen pounds: his wings are extreme short and little, altogether unuseful for flight, but by the help whereof he swims very swiftly. Grew's Museum.
2. A fruit.
The penguin is very common in the West Indies, where the juice of its fruit is often put into punch, being of a sharp acid flavour: there is also a wine made of the juice of this fruit, but it will not keep good long. Miller.
PENINSULA. n. f. [Lat. peninsula; peninsula, Fr.] A piece of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined by a narrow neck to the main.
A fide of Milbrook lieth the peninsula of Infwork, on whose neckland standeth an ancient house. Carew.

PEN

PENINSULATED. adj. [from peninsula.] Almost surrounded by water.
PENITENCE. n. f. [penitence, Fr. penitentia, Lat.] Repen tance; sorrow for crimes; contrition for sin, with amend ments of life or change of the affections.
Death is deferr'd, and penitence has room. Dryden.
To mitigate, if not reverse the doom.
May penitence fly round thy mournful bed,
And wing thy latest prayer to pitying heav'n. Irene.
PENITENT. adj. [penitent, Fr. penitens, Lat.] Repentant; contrite for sin; sorrowful for past transgressions, and reso lutely amending life.
Much it joys me
To see you become so penitent. Shakespeare.
Give me
The penitent instrument to pick that best. Shakespeare.
Nor in the land of their captivity
Humbled themselves, or penitent be sought
The God of their forefathers. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
Provoking God to raise them enemies;
From whom as oft he saves them penitent. Milton.
The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd.
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought
A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.
PENITENT. n. f.
1. One sorrowful for sin.
Concealed treasures shall be brought into use by the in dustry of converted penitents, whose carcasses the impartial laws shall dedicate to the worms of the earth. Bacon.
The repentance, which is formed by a grateful sense of the divine goodness towards him, is resolved on while all the ap petites are in their strength: the penitent conquers the tempta tions of sin in their full force. Rogers's Sermons.
2. One under censures of the church, but admitted to penance.
The counterfeit Dionysius describes the practice of the church, that the catechumens and penitents were admitted to the lessons and psalms, and then excluded. Stillingfleet.
3. One under the direction of a confessor.
PENITENTIAL. adj. [from penitence.] Expressing penitence; enjoined as penance.
I have done penance for contenting love,
Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me
With bitter falls and penitential groans. Shakespeare.
Is it not strange, that a rational man should adore leeks and garlick, and shed penitential tears at the smell of a deified onion? South's Sermons.
PENITENTIAL. n. f. [penitential, Fr. penitentialis, low Latin.]
A book directing the degrees of penance.
The penitentials or book of penance contained such mat ters as related to the imposing of penance, and the reconci liation of the person that suffered penance. Ayliffe.
PENITENTIARY. n. f. [penitencier, Fr. penitentiarius, low Latin.]
1. One who prescribes the rules and measures of penance.
Upon the loss of Urbin, the duke's undoubted right, no penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never so straight pen ance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over pursuit of his right, which he prosperously re-obtained. Bacon.
The great penitentiary with his counsellors prescribes the measure of penance. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. A penitent; one who does penance.
A prison restrained John Northampton's liberty, who, for abusing the fame in his unruly mayoralty of London, was condemned hither as a perpetual penitentiary. Carew.
To maintain a painful fight against the law of sin, is the work of the penitentiary. Hammond.
3. The place where penance is enjoined.
PENITENTLY. adv. [from penitent.] With repentance; with sorrow for sin; with contrition.
PENKNIFE. n. f. [pen and knife.] A knife used to cut pens.
Some schoolmen, fitter to guide penknives than swords, pre cisely stand upon it. Bacon.
PENMAN. n. f. [pen and man.]
1. One who professes the art of writing.
2. An author; a writer.
The four evangelists, within fifty years after our Saviour's death, configned to writing that history, which had been pub lished only by the apostles and disciples: the further conside ration of these holy penmen will fall under another part of this discourse. Addison on the Christian Religion.
The descriptions which the evangelists give, shew that both our blessed Lord and the holy penmen of his story were deeply affected. Atterbury.
PENNACHED. adj. [pennache, Fr.] Is only applied to flowers when the ground of the natural colour of their leaves is ra diated and diversified neatly without any confusion. Trevoux.
Carefully protect from violent rain your pennached tulips, covering them with matras. Evelyn.
PENNANT.

PEN

PENNANT. n. f. [penon, Fr.]
 1. A small flag, ensign or colours.
PENNATED. adj. [penatus, Latin.]
 1. Winged.
 2. Pennated, amongst botanists, are those leaves of plants as grow directly one against another on the same rib or stalk; as those of ash and walnut-tree. Quincy.
PENNER. n. f. [from pen.]
 1. A writer.
 2. A pence. Ans. So it is called in Scotland.
PENNYLESS. adj. [from penny.] Moneyless: poor; wanting money.
PENNON. n. f. [penon, Fr.] A small flag or colour.
 Her yellow locks crisped like golden wire,
 About her shoulders weren loosely shed,
 And when the wind amongst them did inspire,
 They waved like a pennon wide dispred. Fairy Queen.
 Harry sweeps through our land
 With pennons painted in the blood of Harfleur. Shakefp.
 High on his pointed lance his pennon bore,
 His Cretan fight, the conquer'd Minotaur. Dryden.
PENNY. n. f. plural pence. [peniz, Saxon.]
 1. A small coin, of which twelve make a shilling; a penny is the radical denomination from which English coin is numbered, the copper halfpence and farthings being only nummorum famuli, a subordinate species of coin.
 She sighs and shakes her empty shoes in vain,
 No silver penny to reward her pain. Dryden.
 One frugal on his birth-day fears to dine,
 Does at a penny's cost in herbs repine. Dryden.
 2. Proverbially. A small sum.
 You shall hear
 The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed
 In our not fearing Britain, than have tidings
 Of any penny tribute paid. Shakefp.'s Cymbeline.
 We will not lend thee a penny. Shakespeare.
 Because there is a latitude of gain in buying and selling, take not the utmost penny that is lawful, for although it be lawful, yet it is not safe. Taylor's Living Holy.
 3. Money in general.
 Pepper and Sabean incense take;
 And with post-haste thy running markets make;
 Be sure to turn the penny. Dryden.
 It may be a contrivance of some printer, who hath a mind to make a penny. Swift's Miscellanies.
PENNYROYAL, or pudding grass. n. f. [pulegium, Lat.]
 Pennyroyal hath a labiated flower consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip or crest is entire, but the lower lip or beard is divided into three parts; out of the flower cup rises the point attended by four embryos, which afterwards become so many seeds: to which may be added, that the flowers grow in short thick whorles. Miller.
PENNYWEIGHT. n. f. [penny and weight.] A weight containing twenty-four grains troy weight.
 The Sevil piece of Eight is 1  $\frac{1}{2}$  pennyweight in the pound worse than the English standard, weighs fourteen pennyweight, contains thirteen pennyweight, twenty-one grains and fifteen mites, of which there are twenty in the grain of sterling silver, and is in value forty-three English pence and eleven hundredths of a penny. Arbutnot on Coins.
PENNYWISE. adj. [penny and wise.] One who saves small sums at the hazard of larger; one who is a niggard on improper occasions.
 Be not pennywise; riches have wings and fly away of themselves. Bacon.
PENNYWORTH. n. f. [penny and worth.]
 1. As much as is bought for a penny.
 2. Any purchase; any thing bought or sold for money.
 As for corn it is nothing natural, save only for barley and oats, and some places for rye; and therefore the larger pennyworths may be allowed to them. Spenser on Ireland.
 Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage,
 And purchase friends. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 You know I say nothing to him, for he hath neither Latin, French nor Italian, and you may come into court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth of the English.
Shakespeare.
 Lucian affirms, that the souls of usurers after their death are translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain days for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and fides by cudgel and spur. Peacham.
 Though in purchases of church lands men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains. Saunders's Sermons.
 3. Something advantageously bought; a purchase got for less than it is worth.
 For fame he pray'd, but let the event declare
 He had no mighty pennyworth of his pray'r. Dryden.
 4. A small quantity.
 My friendship I distribute in pennyworths to those about me and who displease me least. Swift.

PEN

PENSILE. adj. [penfili, Latin.]
 1. Hanging; suspended.
 There are two trepidations; the one manifest and local, as of the bell when it is penfili; the other, secret of the minute parts.
 This ethereal space,
 Yielding to earth and sea the middle place,
 Anxious I ask you, how the penfili ball Should never strive to rise, nor never fear to fall. Prior.
 2. Supported above the ground.
 The marble brought, erects the spacious dome,
 Or forms the pillars long-extended rows,
 On which the planted grove and penfili garden grows. Prior.
PENSILENESS. n. f. [from penfili.] The state of hanging.
PENSION. n. f. [penfion, Fr.] An allowance made to any one without an equivalent. In England it is generally understood to mean pay given to a state hireling for treason to his country.
 A charity bestowed on the education of her young subjects has more merit than a thousand penfions to those of a higher fortune. Addison's Guardian, N° 105.
 He has liv'd with the great without flattery, and been a friend to men in power without penfions. Pope.
 To PENSION. v. a. [from the noun.] To support by an arbitrary allowance.
 One might expect to see medals of France in the highest perfection, when there is a society penfioned and set apart for the designing of them. Addison on Ancient Medals.
 The hero William and the martyr Charles,
 One knighted Blackmore, and one penfion'd Quarles. Pope.
PENSIONARY. adj. [penfionnaire, French.] Maintained by penfions.
 Scorn his household policies,
 His silly plots and penfionary spies. Dante.
 They were devoted by penfionary obligations to the olive.
Horvel's Vocal Forest.
PENSIONER. n. f. [from penfion.]
 1. One who is supported by an allowance paid at the will of another; a dependant.
 Prices of things necessary for sustentation, grew excessive to the hurt of penfioners, soldiers, and all hired servants. Cand.
 Hovering dreams,
 The fickle penfioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.
 The rector is maintained by the perquisites of the curate's office, and therefore is a kind of penfioner to him. Collier.
 2. A slave of state hired by a stipend to obey his master.
 In Britain's senate he a feat obtains,
 And one more penfioner St. Stephen gains. Pope.
PENSIVE. adj. [penfivo, French; penfivo, Italian.]
 1. Sorrowfully thoughtful; sorrowful; mournfully serious; melancholy.
 Think it still a good work, which they in their penfivo care for the well bestowing of time account waste. Hooker.
 Are you at leisure, holy father,—
 —My leisure serves me, penfivo daughter, now. Shakefp.
 Anxious cares the penfivo nymph oppress,
 And secret passions labour'd in her breast. Pope.
 2. It is generally and properly used of persons; but Prior has applied it to things.
 We at the sad approach of death shall know
 The truth, which from these penfivo numbers flow,
 That we pursue false joy, and suffer real woe. Prior.
PENSIVELY. adv. [from penfivo.] With melancholy; sorrow-fully; with gloomy seriousness.
 So fair a lady did I spy,
 On herbs and flowers she walked penfivo
 Mild, but yet love she proudly did forsake. Spenser.
PENSIVENESS. n. f. [from penfivo.] Melancholy; sorrowfulness; gloomy seriousness.
 Concerning the blessings of God, whether they tend unto this life or the life to come, there is great cause why we should delight more in giving thanks than in making requests for them, inasmuch as the one hath penfiveness and fear, the other always joy annexed. Hooker, b. v. f. 43.
 Would'st thou unlock the door
 To cold despair and gnawing penfiveness. Herbert.
PENT. part. pass. of pen. Shut up.
 Cut my lace asunder,
 That my pent heart may have some scope to beat. Shakefp.
 The son of Clarence have I pent up close. Shakefp.
PENT. part. pass. of pen. Shut up.
 But with a grain a day, I would not buy Their mercy. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Their armour help'd their harm, crush'd in, and bruise'd
 Into their substance pent. Milton.
 The foul pure fire, like ours, of equal force;
 But pent in flesh, must issue by discourse. Dryden.
PENT up in Utica he vainly forms
 A poor epitome of Roman greatness. Addison's Cato.
PENTACULAR. adj. [pentile and capfular.] Having five cavities.
PENTACHORD. adj. [pentile and χορδὴ.] An instrument with five strings. PENTAEDEUS.

PEP

PENTAEDEUS. adj. [pentile and ἑδρα.] Having five sides.
 The pentaealous columnar coralloid bodies are composed of plates set lengthways, and passing from the surface to the axis. Woodward on Fossils.
PENTAGON. n. f. [pentagon, Fr. pentile and γωνία.] A figure with five angles.
 I know of that famous piece at Capralora, cast by Baroccio into the form of a pentagon with a circle inscribed. Wotton.
PENTAGONAL. adj. [from pentagon.] Quinquangular; having five angles.
 The body being cut transversely, its surface appears like a net made up of pentagonal meshes, with a pentagonal star in each mesh. Woodward on Fossils.
PENTAMETER. n. f. [pentametre, Fr. pentametrus, Lat.] A Latin verse of five feet.
 Mr. Ditch may possibly play some pentameters upon us, but he shall be answered in Alexandrines. Addison.
PENTANGULAR. adj. [pentile and angular.] Five cornered.
 His thick and bony scales stand in rows, so as to make the flesh almost pentangular. Grew.
PENTATEALOUS. adj. [pentile and petala, Lat.] Having five petals.
PENTASPAST. adj. [pentaspaste, Fr. pentile and παστα.] An engine with five pulleys. Ditch.
PENTASTICK. n. f. [pentile and σῆκος.] A composition consisting of five verses.
PENTASTYLE. n. f. [pentile and στυλ.] In architecture, a work in which are five rows of columns. Ditch.
PENTATEUCH. n. f. [pentile and τεῦχος; pentateuch, Fr.] The five books of Moses.
 The author in the ensuing part of the pentateuch makes not unfrequent mention of the angels. Bentley.
PENTECOST. n. f. [πεντηστή; pentecoste, Fr.] A feast among the Jews.
Pentecost signifies the fiftieth, because this feast was celebrated the fiftieth day after the sixteenth of Nisan, which was the second day of the feast of the passover: the Hebrews call it the feast of weeks, because it was kept seven weeks after the passover: they then offered the first fruits of the wheat harvest, which then was completed: it was instituted to oblige the Israelites to repair to the temple, there to acknowledge the Lord's dominion, and also to render thanks to God for the law he had given them from mount Sinai, on the fiftieth day after their coming out of Egypt. Calmet.
 'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio, Come pentecost as quickly as it will
 Some five and twenty years. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
PENTECOSTAL. adj. [from pentecost.] Belonging to Whitfun-tide.
 I have composed sundry collects, made up out of the church collects with some little variation; as the collects ad-ventual, quadragesimal, paschal or pentecostal. Sanderfon.
PENTHOUSE. n. f. [pent, from pen, Fr. and house.] A shed hanging out aloft from the main wall.
 This is the penthouse under which Lorenzo desir'd us to make a stand. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
 Sleep shall neither night nor day
 Hang upon his penthouse lid. Shakespeare.
 The Turks lurking under their penthouse, labour'd with mattocks to dig up the foundation of the wall. Knolles.
 A blow was received by riding under a penthouse. Wifeman.
 Those defensive engines, made by the Romans into the form of penthouses to cover the assailants from the weapons of the besieg'd, would be presently batter'd in pieces with stones and blocks. Wilkins.
 My penthouse eye-brows and my shaggy beard
 Offend your sight; but these are mainly signs. Dryden.
 The chill rain
 Drops from some penthouse on her wretched head. Rowe.
PENTICE. n. f. [appentir, French; pentice, Italian.] It is commonly supposed a corruption of penthouse; but perhaps pentice is the true word. A sloping roof.
 Climes that fear the falling and lying of much snow, ought to provide more inclining pentices. Wotton.
PENTILE. n. f. [pent and tile.] A tile formed to cover the sloping part of the roof.
Pentiles are thirteen inches long, with a button to hang on the laths; they are hollow and circular. Moxon.
PENT up. part. adj. [pent, from pen and up.] Shut up.
 Close pent up guilts Rive your concealing continents. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
PENULTIMA. n. f. [Latin.] The last syllable but one.
PENUMBRA. n. f. [pen and umbra, Latin.] An imperfect shadow.
 The breadth of this image answered to the sun's diameter, and was about two inches and the eighth part of an inch, including the penumbra. Newton.
PENURIOS. adj. [from penuria, Latin.]
 1. Niggardly; sparing; not liberal; fordidly mean.
 What more can our penurious reason grant
 To the large whale or castled elephant, Prior.

PEN

2. Scant; not plentiful.
 Some penurious spring by chance appear'd Scanty of water. Addison.
PENURIOSLY. adv. [from penurious.] Sparingly; not plentifully.
PENURIOSNESS. n. f. [from penurious.] Niggardliness; parsimony.
 If we consider the infinite industry and penuriousness of that people, it is no wonder that, notwithstanding they furnish as great taxes as their neighbours, they make a better figure.
Addison on the State of the War.
PENURY. n. f. [penuria, Lat.] Poverty; indigence.
 The penury of the ecclesiastical estate. Hooker.
 Who can perfectly declare
 The wondrous cradle of thy infancy?
 When thy great mother Venus first thee bare,
 Begot of plenty and of penury. Spenser.
 Sometimes am I king;
 Then treason makes me with myself a beggar;
 And so I am: then crushing penury
 Persuades me, I was better when a king;
 Then I am king'd again. Shakespeare, Richard III.
 All innocent they were exposed to hardship and penury, which, without you, they could never have escaped. Sprat.
 Let them not fill be obtusely blind,
 Still to divert the good design'd,
 Or with malignant penury
 To starve the royal virtues of his mind. Dryden.
 May they not justly to our climes upbraid Shortness of night, and penury of shade. Prior.
PEONY. n. f. [paeonia, Latin.]
 The peony hath a flower composed of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a fruit, in which several little horns bent downwards are gathered, as it were, into a little head covered with down opening lengthways, containing many globular seeds. Miller.
 A physician had often tried the peony root unseasonably gathered without success; but having gathered it when the decreasing moon passes under Aries and tied the slit root about the necks of his patients, he had freed more than one from epileptical fits. Boyle.
PEOPLE. n. f. [people, Fr. populus, Lat.]
 1. A nation; these who compose a community.
 Prophecy again before many peoples and nations and tongues. Revelations x. 11.
 Ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in summer. Proverbs xxx. 25.
 What is the city but the people? Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
 True the people are the city.
 2. The vulgar.
 The knowing artist may Judge better than the people, but a play
 Made for delight,
 If you approve it not, has no excuse. Waller.
 3. The commonalty; not the princes or nobles.
 4. Persons of a particular class.
 If a man temper his actions to content every combination of peoples, the mulick will be the fuller. Bacon.
 A small red flower in the stubble fields country people call the wincoipe. Bacon.
 5. Men, or persons in general. In this sense, the word people is used indefinitely, like ou in French.
 The frogs petitioning for a king, bids people have a care of struggling with heaven. L'Estrange.
People were tempted to lend by great premiums and large interest. Swift's Miscellanies.
 Watery liquor will keep an animal from starving by diluting the fluids; for people have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water. Arbutnot on Aliments.
People in adversity should preserve laudable customs. Clarissa.
TO PEOPLE. v. a. [peupler, French.] To stock with inhabitants.
 Suppose that Brute, or whosoever else that first peopled this island, had arrived upon Thames, and called the island after his name Britannia. Raleigh's History of the World.
 He would not be alone, who all things can;
 But peopled Heav'n with angels, earth with man. Dryden.
 Beauty a monarch is,
 Which kingly power magnificently proves
 By crouds of slaves, and peopled empire loves. Dryden.
 A peopled city made a desert place. Dryden.
 Imperious death directs his ebon lance;
Peoples great Henry's tombs, and leads up Holben's dance. Prior.
PEPASTICKS. n. f. [penastika.] Medicines which are good to help the rawness of the stomach and digest crudities. Ditch.
PEPPER. n. f. [piper, Lat. peivre, Fr.]
 We have three kinds of pepper; the black, the white, and the long, which are three different fruits produced by three distinct plants: black pepper is a dried fruit of the size of a vetch and roundish, but rather of a deep brown than a black colour;

colour: with this we are supplied by the Dutch from their East Indian settlements in Java, Malabar and Sumatra, and the plant has the same heat and fiery taste that we find in the pepper: white pepper is commonly fictitious, and prepared from the black by taking off the outer bark, but there is a rarer sort, which is a genuine fruit naturally white: long pepper is a fruit gathered while unripe and dried, of an inch or an inch and half in length, and of the thickness of a large goose quill: it much resembles the catkins of some of our trees, and contains several seeds singly in small membranaceous cells, and these seeds are of an acrid, hot and bitterish taste: the whole fruit is of a brownish grey colour and cylindrick in its figure. Hill.

Scatter o'er the blooms the pungent dust
Of pepper, fatal to the frosty tribe. Thomson's Spring.

To PEPPER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To sprinkle with pepper.

2. To beat; to mangle with shot or blows.
I have peppered two of them; two I have paid, two rogues in buckram suits. Shaksp. Henry IV.

PEPPERBOX. n. f. [pepper and box.] A box for holding pepper. I will not take the leacher; he cannot creep into a half-penny purse nor into a pepperbox. Shaksp.

PEPPER-CORN. n. f. [pepper and corn.] Any thing of inconsiderable value.

Our performances, though dues, are like those pepper-corns which freeholders pay their landlord to acknowledge that they hold all from him. Boyle.

Folks from mud-wall'd tenement
Bring landlords pepper-corn for rent. Prior.

PEPPER-MINT. n. f. [pepper and mint.] Mint eminently hot.

PEPPERWORT. n. f. [pepper and wort.] A plant.

Pepperwort hath a flower consisting of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross, from whose cup arises the pistillum, which afterward becomes a spear-shaped fruit, which is divided in the middle by a partition into two cells, which contain many oblong seeds. Miller.

PE-TICK. adj. [periticks.] What helps digestion. Ans.

PERACUTE. n. f. [peracutus, Lat.] Very sharp; very violent.

Malign, continual peracute fevers, after most dangerous attacks, suddenly remit of the ardent heat. Harvey.

PERADVENTURE. adv. [per adventure, Fr.]

1. Perhaps; may be; by chance.

That wherein they might not be like unto either, was such peradventure as had been no whit less unlawful. Hooker.

As you return, visit my house; let our old acquaintance be renew'd; peradventure I will with you to court. Shaksp.

What peradventure may appear very full to me, may appear very crude and maimed to a stranger. Digby.

2. Doubt; question. It is sometimes used as a noun, but not gracefully nor properly.

Though men's persons ought not to be hated, yet without all peradventure their practices justify may. South.

To PERAGRATE. v. a. [peragro, Lat.] To wander over; to ramble through. Diis.

PERAGRATION. n. f. [from peragrate.] The act of passing through any state or space.

A month of peragratiō is the time of the moon's revolution from any part of the zodiac into the same again, and this containeth but twenty-seven days and eight hours. Brown.

The moon has two accounts which are her months or years of revolution; one her periodic month, or month of peragratiō, which chiefly respects her own proper motion or place in the zodiac, by which she like the sun performs her revolution round the zodiac from any one point to the same again. Holder on Time.

To PERAMBULATE. v. a. [perambulo, Lat.]

1. To walk through.

2. To survey, by passing through.

Persons the lord deputy should nominate to view and perambulate Irish territories, and thereupon to divide and limit the same. Davies on Ireland.

PERAMBULATION. n. f. [from perambulate.]

1. The act of passing through or wandering over.

The duke looked still for the coming back of the Armada, even when they were wandering and making their perambulation of the northern seas. Bacon.

2. A travelling survey.

France is a square of five hundred and fifty miles traverse, thronging with such multitudes, that the general calcul, made in the last perambulation exceeded eighteen millions. Hovel.

PERCASE. adv. [par and case.] Perchance; perhaps. Not used.

A virtuous man will be virtuous in solitude, and not only in theatro, though perchance it will be more strong by glory and fame, as an heat which is doubled by reflexion. Bacon.

PERCANT. adj. [percant, Fr.] Piercing; penetrating.

Wonderous quick and percant was his spirit.

As eagle's eyes, that can behold the sun. Fairy Queen.

PERCEIVABLE. adj. [from perceive.] Perceptible; such as falls under perception.

The body, though it really moves, yet not changing perceivable distance with some other bodies, as fast as the ideas of our own minds will follow one another, seems to stand still; as the hands of clocks. Locke.

That which we perceive when we see figure, as perceivable by sight, is nothing but the termination of colour. Locke.

PERCEIVABLY. adv. [from perceivable.] In such a manner as may be observed or known.

To PERCEIVE. v. a. [percipio, Lat.]

1. To discover by some sensible effects.

Consider,
When you above perceive me like a crow,
That it is place which lessens and sets off. Shaksp.

2. To know; to observe.

Jesus perceived in his spirit, that they so reasoned within themselves.

His sons come to honour, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not. Job xiv. 21.

'Till we ourselves see it with our own eyes, and perceive it by our own understandings, we are still in the dark. Locke.

How do they come to know that themselves think, when they themselves do not perceive it. Locke.

3. To be affected by.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.

PERCEPTIBILITY. n. f. [from perceptible.]

1. The state of being an object of the senses or mind; the state of being perceptible.

2. Perception; the power of perceiving.

The illumination is not so bright and fulgent, as to obscure or extinguish all perceptibility of the reason. More.

PERCEPTIBLE. adj. [perceptible, Fr. perceptus, Lat.] Such as may be known or observed.

No sound is produced but with a perceptible blast of the air, and with some resistance of the air strucken. Bacon.

When I think, remember or abstract; these intricate operations of my mind are not perceptible by my sight, hearing, taste, smell or feeling. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It perceives them immediately, as being immediately objected to and perceptible to the sense; as I perceive the sun by my sight. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

In the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body, more good will accrue to mankind by attending to the large, open and perceptible parts, than by studying too much finer nerves. Pope's Essay on Man.

PERCEPTIBLY. adv. [from perceptible.] In such a manner as may be perceived.

The woman decays perceptibly every week. Pope.

PERCEPTION. n. f. [perception, Fr. percipio, Lat.]

1. The power of perceiving; knowledge; consciousness.

Matter hath no life nor perception, and is not conscious of its own existence. Bentley's Sermons.

Perception is that act of the mind, or rather a passion or impression, whereby the mind becomes conscious of any thing; as when I feel hunger, thirst, cold or heat. Wait.

2. The act of perceiving; observation.

3. Notion; idea.

By the inventors, and their followers that would seem not to come too short of the perceptions of the leaders, they are magnified. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

4. The state of being affected by something.

Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the vallies below; and therefore they lay in Wales, where certain hills have their night caps on, they mean mischief. Bacon.

This experiment discovereth perception in plants to move towards that which should comfort them, though at a distance. Bacon's Natural History.

PERCEPTIVE. adj. [perceptus, Lat.] Having the power of perceiving.

There is a difficulty that pincheth: the soul is awake and solicited by external motions, for some of them reach the perceptive region in the most silent repose and obscurity of night: what is it then that prevents our sensations? Glavil.

Whatever the least real point of the essence of the perceptive part of the soul does perceive, every real point of the perceptive must perceive at once. More's Divine Dialogues.

PERCEPTIVITY. n. f. [from perceptive.] The power of perception or thinking. Locke.

PERCH. n. f. [perca, Lat. perche, Fr.]

The perch is one of the fishes of prey, that, like the pike and trout, carries his teeth in his mouth, he dare venture to kill and destroy several other kinds of fish: he has a hooked kill and hog back, which is armed with stiff bristles, and all his skin armed with thick hard scales, and hath two fins on his back: he spawns but once a year, and is held very nutritive. Walton's Angler.

PERCH. n. f. [perica, Lat. perche, Fr.]

No article of religion hath credibility enough for them; and yet these cautious and quicksighted gentlemen can wink and swallow down this foolish opinion about percipient atoms. Bentley's Sermons.

Sensation and perception are not inherent in matter as such; for if it were so, every flock or stone would be a percipient and rational creature. Bentley's Sermons.

PERCIPIENT. n. f. One that has the power of perceiving.

The soul is the sole percipient, which hath animadversion and sense properly so called, and the body is only the receiver of corporeal impressions. Glavil's Scept.

Nothing in the extended percipient perceives the whole, but only part. More's Divine Dialogues.

PERCLOSE. n. f. [per and close.] Conclusion; last part.

By the perclose of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such an one as travelleth in fear of revengement. Raleigh.

To PERCOLATE. v. a. [percolo, Lat.] To strain.

The evidences of fact are percolated through a vast period of ages. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

PERCOLATION. n. f. [from percolate.] The act of straining; purification or separation by straining.

Experiments touching the straining and passing of bodies one through another, they call percolation. Bacon.

Water passing through the veins of the earth is rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

To PERCUSS. v. a. [percutio, Lat.] To strike.

Flame percuss'd by air giveth a noise; as in blowing of the fire by bellows; and so likewise flame percussing the air strongly. Bacon's Natural History.

PERCUSSION. n. f. [percutio, Lat. percussio, Fr.]

1. The act of striking; stroke.

With thy grim looks, and
The thunder-like percussio of thy founts, Thou mad'st thine enemies shake. Shaksp.

The percussio of the greater quantity of air is produced by the greatness of the body percussing. Bacon.

Some note, that the times when the stroke or percussio of an envious eye doth most hurt are, when the party envious is beheld in glory. Bacon's Essays.

The vibrations or tremors excited in the air by percussio, continue a little time to move from the place of percussio in concentric spheres to great distances. Newton's Opticks.

Marbles taught him percussio and the laws of motion, and tops the centrifugal motion. Pope and Arbuthnot's Scriblerus.

2. Effect of sound in the ear.

In double rhymes the percussio is stronger. Rymer.

PERCUTIENT. n. f. [percutions, Latin.] Striking; having the power to strike.

Inequality of sounds is accidental, either from the roughness or obliquity of the passage, or from the doubling of the percipient. Bacon.

PERDITION. n. f. [perditio, Lat. perdition, Fr.]

1. Destruction; ruin; death.

Upon tidings now arriv'd, importing the meer perdition of the Turkish sleet, every man puts himself in triumph. Shaksp.

The world is grown so bad,
That wrens make prey, where eagles dare not perch. Shaksp.

The morning mules perch like birds, and sing
Among his branches. Crashaw.

Let owls keep close within the tree, and not perch upon the upper boughs. South's Sermons.

They wing'd their flight aloft, then stooping low,
Perch'd on the double tree, that bears the golden bough. Dry.

Glory like the trembling eagle stood Perch'd on my beaver: in the Granic flood,
When fortune's self my standard trembling bore,
And the pale fates stood frighten on the shore. Lee.

Hoofs of birds that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs, had nightly lodging there. Dryden.

To PERCH. v. a. To place on a perch.

It would be notoriously perceptible, if you could perch yourself as a bird on the top of some high steeple. More.

As evening dragon came,
Affailant on the perch'd roofs,
And nests in order rang'd
Of some villatic fowl. Milton's Agonistes.

He may have fifty-six exceptions peremptory against the jurors, of which he shall shew no cause.
To-morrow be in readiness to go;
Excuse it not for I am peremptory.
Not death himself
In mortal fury is half so peremptory,
As we to keep this city.
Though the text and the doctrine run peremptory and absolute, whosoever denies Christ, shall assuredly be denied by him; yet still there is a tacit condition, unless repentance intervene.
The more modest confests, that learning was to give us a fuller discovery of our ignorance, and to keep us from being peremptory and dogmatical in our determinations.
He would never talk in such a peremptory and discouraging manner, were he not assured that he was able to subdue the most powerful opposition against the doctrine which he taught.
PERENNIAL. adj. [perennis, Latin.]
1. Lasting through the year.
If the quantity were precisely the same in these perennial fountains, the difficulty would be greater.
2. Perpetual; unceasing.
The matter wherewith these perennial clouds are raised, is the sea that surrounds them.
PERENNITY. n. f. [from perennitas, Lat.] Equality of lasting through all seasons; perpetuity.
That springs have their origin from the sea, and not from rains and vapours, I conclude from the perennity of divers springs.
PERFECT. adj. [perfectus, Lat. parfait, Fr.]
1. Complete; consummate; finished; neither defective nor redundant.
We count those things perfect, which want nothing requisite for the end, whereto they were instituted.
2. Fully informed; fully skilful.
Within a ken our army lies;
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good.
Fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect.
I do not take myself to be so perfect in the privileges of Bohemia, as to handle that part; and will not offer at that I cannot master.
3. Pure; blameless; clear; immaculate. This is a sense chiefly theological.
My parts, my title, and my perfect soul
Shall manifest me rightly.
Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God.
4. Safe; Out of danger.
Thou art perfect then, our ship hath touch'd upon
The deserts of Bohemia.
TO PERFECT. v. a. [perfectus, from perficio, Latin; parfaire, French.]
1. To finish; to complete; to consummate; to bring to its due state.
If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us.
Beauty now must perfect my renown;
With that I govern'd him that rules this isle.
In substances rest not in the ordinary complex idea commonly received, but enquire into the nature and properties of the things themselves, and thereby perfect our ideas of their distinct species.
Endeavour not to settle too many habits at once, lest by variety you confound them, and so perfect none.
What toil did honest Curio take
To get one medal wanting yet,
And perfect all his Roman set?
2. To make skilful; to instruct fully.
Her cause and yours
I'll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you
Before the duke.
PERFECTER. [from perfect.] One that makes perfect.
This practice was altered; they offered not to Mercury, but to Jupiter the perfecter.
PERFECTION. n. f. [perfectio, Lat. perfection, Fr.]
1. The state of being perfect.
Man doth seek a triple perfection; first a sensual, consisting in those things which very life itself requireth, either as necessary supplements or as ornaments thereof; then an intellectual, consisting in those things which none underneath man is capable of; lastly, a spiritual and divine, consisting in those things whereto we tend by supernatural means here, but cannot here attain.
It is a judgment maim'd and most imperfect,
That will confest perfection to could err
Against all rules of nature.
True virtue being united to the heavenly grace of faith makes up the highest perfection.

PER

No human understanding being absolutely secured from mistake by the perfection of its own nature, it follows that no man can be infallible but by supernatural assistance.
Many things impossible to thought,
Have been by need to full perfection brought.
2. Something that concurs to produce supreme excellence.
What tongue can her perfections tell,
In whose each part all pens may dwell?
You knot of mouth-friends; smoke and lukewarm water
Is your perfection.
An heroic poem requires, as its last perfection, the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking, which requires more of the active virtue than the suffering.
3. Attribute of God.
If God be infinitely holy, just and good, he must take delight in those creatures that resemble him most in these perfections.
TO PERFECTORATE. v. a. [perfectior, Fr. from perfectio.] To make perfect; to advance to perfection. This is a word proposed by Dryden, but not received nor worthy of reception.
Painters and sculptors, chasing the most elegant natural beauties, perfect the idea, and advance their art above nature itself in her individual productions; the utmost mastery of human performance.
He has founded an academy for the progress and perfecting of painting.
PERFECTIVE. adj. [from perfectus.] Conducting to bring to perfection.
Praise and adoration are actions perfective of our souls.
Eternal life shall not consist in endless love; the other faculties shall be employed in actions suitable to, and perfective of their natures.
PERFECTIVELY. adv. [from perfective.] In such a manner as brings to perfection.
As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perfectively in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end.
PERFECTLY. adv. [from perfect.]
1. In the highest degree of excellence.
2. Totally; completely.
Chawing little sponges dipt in oil, when perfectly under water, he could longer support the want of respiration.
Words rec'd to our thoughts those ideas only which they have been wont to be signs of, but cannot introduce any perfectly new and unknown simple ideas.
3. Exactly; accurately.

PERFECTNESS. n. f. [from perfect.]
1. Completeness.
2. Goodness; virtue. A scriptural word.
Put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.
3. Skill.
Is this your perfectness?
PERFIDIOUS. adj. [perfidus, Lat. perfide, Fr.] Treacherous; false to trust; guilty of violated faith.
Tell me, perfidious, was it fit
To make my cream a perquisite,
And steal to mend your wages.
PERFIDIOUSLY. adv. [from perfidius.] Treacherously; by breach of faith.
He has betray'd your business, and given up
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome.
They eat perfidiously their words.
Can he not deliver us possession of such places as would put him in a worse condition, whenever he should perfidiously renew the war?
PERFIDIOUSNESS. n. f. [from perfidius.] The quality of being perfidious.
Some things have a natural deformity in them; as perjury, perfidiousness and ingratitude.
PERFIDY. n. f. [perfidia, Lat. perfidia, Fr.] Treachery; want of faith; breach of faith.
PERFLABLE. adj. [from perfluo, Lat.] Having the wind driven through.
TO PERFLATE. v. a. [perfluo, Lat.] To blow through.
If Eastern winds did perflate our climates more frequently, they would clarify and refresh our air.
The first consideration in building of cities, is to make them open, airy and well perflated.
PERFLATION. n. f. [from perflatio.] The act of blowing through.
Miners, by perflations with large bellows, give motion to the air, which ventilates and cools the mines.
TO PERFORATE. v. a. [perforo, Lat.] To pierce with a tool; to bore.
Draw the bough of a low fruit tree newly budded without and twisting, into an earthen pot perforate at the bottom, and then cover the pot with earth, it will yield a very large fruit.
A perforated bladder does not swell.
The labour'd chyle pervades the pores,
In all the arterial perforated shores.

PER

The aperture was limited by an opaque circle placed between the eye-glass and the eye, and perforated in the middle with a little round hole for the rays to pass through to the eye.
Worms perforate the guts.
PERFORATION. n. f. [from perforare.]
1. The act of piercing or boring.
The likeliest way is the perforation of the body of the tree in several places one above another, and the filling of the holes.
The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, and the drawing the tendons of the third joints through them.
2. Hole; place bored.
That the nipples should be made spongy, and with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk, are arguments of providence.
PERFORATOR. n. f. [from perforare.] The instrument of boring.
The patient placed in a convenient chair, dipping the trocar in oil, stab it suddenly through the teguments, and withdrawing the perforator, leave the waters to empty by the canula.
PERFORCE. adv. [per and force.] By violence; violently.
Guyon to him leaping, flaid
His hand, that trembled as one terrified;
And though himself were at the sight dismay'd,
Yet him perforce restrain'd.
Jealous Oberon would have the child,
But the perforce withholds the loved boy.
She amaz'd, her cheeks
All trembling and arising, full of spots,
And pale with death at hand, perforce the breaks
Into the inmost rooms.
TO PERFORM. v. a. [performare, Italian.] To execute; to do; to discharge; to achieve an undertaking; to accomplish.
All three set among the foremost ranks of fame for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt.
Hast thou, spirit,
Perform'd to point the tempest that I had thee?
What cannot you and I perform upon
Th' unguarded Duncan?
I will cry unto God that performeth all things for me.
Let all things be performed after the law of God diligently.
Thou, my love,
Perform his fun'ials with paternal care.
You perform her office in the sphere,
Born of her blood, and make a new Platonick year.
TO PERFORM. v. n. To succeed in an attempt.
When a poet has performed admirably in several illustrious places, we sometimes also admire his very errors.
PERFORMABLE. adj. [from perform.] Practicable; such as may be done.
Men forget the relations of history, affirming that elephants have no joints, whereas their actions are not performable without them.
PERFORMANCE. n. f. [from perform.]
1. Completion of something designed; execution of something promised.
His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he now is, nothing.
Promising is the very air o' th' time; it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act, and but in the plainer kind of people, the deed is quite out of use.
Perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance.
The only means to make him successful in the performance of these great works, was to be above contempt.
2. Compulsion; work.
In the good poems of other men, I can only be sure, that 'tis the hand of a good master; but in your performances 'tis scarcely possible for me to be deceived.
Few of our comic performances give good examples.
3. Action; something done.
In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what have you heard her say?
PERFORMER. n. f. [from perform.]
1. One that performs any thing.
The merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer.
2. It is generally applied to one that makes a publick exhibition of his skill.
TO PERFUMATE. v. n. [perfumo, Lat.] To rub over.
PERFUMATORY. adj. [from perfumo.] That which perfumes.
PERFUME. n. f. [perfume, Fr.]
1. Strong odour of sweetness used to give scents to other things.
Pomanders and knots of powders for drying rheums are not so strong as perfumes; you may have them continually in your hand, whereas perfume you can take but at times.
Perfumes, though gross bodies that may be sensibly waited, yet fill the air, so that we can put our nose in no part of the room where a perfume is burned, but we smell it.
2. Sweet odour; fragrance.
No rich perfumes refresh the fruitful field,
Nor fragrant herbs their native incense yield.
TO PERFUME. v. a. [from the noun.] To scent; to impregnate with sweet scent.
Your papers
Let me have them very well perfum'd,
For she is sweeter than perfume itself.
To whom they go.
Why rather, sleep, lie thou in smoky cribs,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber,
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody?
Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd.
The distilled water of wild poppy, mingled at half with rose water, take with some mixture of a few cloves in a perfuming pan.
Smells adhere to hard bodies; as in perfuming of gloves, which sweethen them corporal.
The pains the takes are vainly meant,
To hide her amorous heart,
'Tis like perfuming an ill scent,
The smell's too strong for art.
See spicy clouds from lowly Sharon rise,
And Carmel's flow'ry top perfumes the skies!
PERFUMER. n. f. [from perfumare.] One whose trade is to sell things made to gratify the scent.
A mof the perfumers have out of apple trees, that hath an excellent scent.
First issued from perfumers shops
A croud of fashionable fops.
PERFUMCTORILY. adv. [perfumtorie, Lat.] Carelessly; negligently.
His majesty calling his eye perfumtorily upon it, and believing it had been drawn by mature advice, no sooner received it, than he delivered it to the lord-keeper.
Whereas all logic is reducible to the four principal operations of the mind, the two first of these have been handled by Aristotle perfumtorily; of the fourth he has said nothing at all.
PERFUMCTORY. adj. [perfumtorie, Lat.] Slight; careless; negligent.
A transient and perfumctory examination of things leads men into considerable mistakes, which a more correct and rigorous scrutiny would have detected.
TO PERFUSE. v. a. [perfuso, Lat.] To tincture; to overspread.
These dregs immediately perfuse the blood with melancholy, and cause obstructions.
PERHAPS. adv. [per and hap.] Peradventure; it may be.
Perhaps the good old man that kiss'd his son,
And left a blessing on his head,
His arms about him spread,
Hopes yet to see him ere his glass be run.
Somewhat excellent may be invented, perhaps more excellent than the first design, though Virgil must be still excepted, when that perhaps takes place.
His thoughts inspir'd his tongue,
And all his soul receiv'd a real love.
Perhaps new graces darted from her eyes,
Perhaps lost pity charm'd his yielding soul,
Perhaps her love, perhaps her kingdom charm'd him.

PERIAPT. n. f. [περιπτω] Amulet; charm worn as preservatives against diseases or mischief.
The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly;
Now help, ye charming spells and periapts.
PERICARDIUM. n. f. [περι and καρδια; pericarde, Fr.]
The pericardium is a thin membrane of a conick figure that resembles a purse, and contains the heart in its cavity: its basis is pierced in five places, for the passage of the vessels which enter and come out of the heart: the use of the pericardium is to contain a small quantity of clear water, which is separated by small glands in it, that the surface of the heart may not grow dry by its continual motion.
PERICARPUM. n. f. [pericarpe, Fr.] In botany, a pellicle or thin membrane encompassing the fruit or grain of a plant, or that part of a fruit that envelops the seed.
Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seed, it serves also for the sustenance of animals.
PERICLITATION. n. f. [from periclitari, Lat. periclitari, Fr.]
1. The state of being in danger.
2. Trial; experiment.

PER

PERICRANIUM. n. s. [from περι and cranium; pericrane, Fr.] The pericranium is the membrane that covers the skull: it is a very thin and nervous membrane of an exquisite sense, such as covers immediately not only the cranium, but all the bones of the body, except the teeth; for which reason it is also called the periosteum. Quincy.
Having divided the pericranium, I saw a fissure running the whole length of the wound. Wifeman's Surgery.
PERICULOUS. adj. [periculosus, Lat.] Dangerous; jeopardous; hazardous. A word not in use.
As the moon every seventh day arriveth unto a contrary sign, so Saturn, which remaineth about as many years in one sign, and holdeth the same consideration in years as the moon in days, doth cause these periculuous periods. Brown.
PERIECY. n. s. [περι and εκυ.] Needless caution in an operation; unnecessary diligence.
PERIGEE. n. s. [περι and γει; perigee, Fr.] Is a point in PERIGEUM. the heavens, wherein a planet is said to be in its nearest distance possible from the earth. Harris.
By the proportion of its motion, it was at the creation, at the beginning of Aries, and the perigeum or nearest point in Libra. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERIHELUM. n. s. [περι and ήλιος; perihelie, Fr.] Is that point of a planet's orbit, wherein it is nearest the sun. Harris.
Sir Isaac Newton has made it probable, that the comet, which appeared in 1680, by approaching to the sun in its perihelium, acquired such a degree of heat, as to be 50000 years a cooling. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
PERIL. n. s. [peril, Fr. perikel, Dutch; periculum, Lat.] 1. Danger; hazard; jeopardy.
Dear Pyrocles, be liberal unto me of those things, which have made you indeed precious to the world, and now doubt not to tell of your perils. Sidney, b. ii.
How many perils do unfold
The righteous man to make him daily fall. Fairy Queen.
In the act what perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd. Daniel.
The love and pious duty which you pay,
Have pass'd the perils of so hard a way.
Strong, healthy and young people are more in peril by pestilential fevers, than the weak and old. Arbutnot.
2. Denunciation; danger denounced.
I told her,
On your displeasure's peril,
She should not visit you. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
PERILOUS. adj. [perilous, Fr. from peril.] 1. Dangerous; hazardous; full of danger.
Alterations in the service of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common-weals, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto it. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.
Her guard is chastity,
She that has that is clad in compleat steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths, Infamous hills and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.
Dilate propitious to my duteous ear,
What arts can captivate the changeful fear:
For perilous th' assay, unheard the toil
To elude the presence of a God by guile. Pope.
Into the perilous flood Bear fearless. Thomson.
2. It is used by way of emphasis, or ludicrous exaggeration of any thing bad.
Thus was th' accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge perilous threwd. Hudibras.
3. Smart; witty. In this sense it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its signification from the notion, that children eminent for wit, do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger. It is vulgarly perilous.
'Tis a perilous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakefp.
PERILOUSLY. adv. [from perilous.] Dangerously.
PERILOUSNESS. n. s. [from perilous.] Dangeroufness.
PERIMETER. n. s. [περι and μετρον; perimetre, Fr.] The compass or sum of all the sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.
By compressing the glasses still more, the diameter of this ring would increase, and the breadth of its orbit or perimeter decrease, until another new colour emerged in the centre of the last. Newton's Opticks.
PERIOD. n. s. [periode, Fr. περιδος.] 1. A circuit.
2. Time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner.
Tell these, that the sun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the sun in their several periods; they cannot admit a syllable of this new doctrine. Watts.

3. A stated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at beginning.
A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end too, and then begins again as often as it ends. Holder on Time.
We stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.
4. The end or conclusion.
If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shakefp.
There is nothing so secret that shall not be brought to light within the compass of our world; whatsoever concerns this sublunary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the last period. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
What anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal periods.
Oh! 'tis a dreadful interval of time. Addison.
5. The state at which any thing terminates.
Beauty's empires, like to greater states,
Have certain periods set, and hidden fates. Steele.
Light-confering stones must be set in the sun before they retain light, and the light will appear greater or lesser, until they come to their utmost period. Digby.
6. Length of duration.
Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than their ordinary period; as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year. Bacon's Natural History.
7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.
Periods are beautiful, when they are not too long: for so they have their strength too as in a pike or javelin. B. Johnson.
Is this the confidence you gave me,
Lean on it safely, not a period
Shall be unaid for me. Milton.
Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy, cunningly wrap up in a smooth period. Locke.
For the assistance of weak memories, the first words of every period in every page may be written in distinct colours. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
From the tongue
Th' unfinished period falls. Thomson's Spring.
To PERIOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.
Your letter he desires
To those have thut him up, which failing to him, Periods his comfort. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
PERIODICK. adj. [periodique, Fr. from period.] 1. Circular; making a circuit; making a revolution.
Was the earth's periodick motion always in the same plane with that of the diurnal, we should miss of those kindly increases of day and night. Derham.
Four moons perpetually roll round the planet Jupiter, and are carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. Happening by revolution at some stated time.
Astrological undertakers would raise men out of some stony soil, impregnated with the influence of the stars upon some remarkable and periodical conjunctions. Bentley.
3. Regular; performing some action at stated times.
The confusion of mountains and hollows furnished me with a probable reason for those periodical fountains in Switzerland, which flow only at such particular hours of the day. Addison.
4. Relating to periods or revolutions.
It is implicitly denied by Aristotle in his politics, in that discourse against Plato, who measured the vicissitude and mutation of states by a periodical fatality of number. Brown.
PERIODICALLY. adv. [from periodical.] At stated periods.
The three tides ought to be understood of the space of the night and day, and then there will be a regular flux and reflux thrice in that time every eight hours periodically. Broom.
PERIOSTEUM. n. s. [περι and στέον; periofte, Fr.] All the bones are covered with a very sensible membrane, called the periosteum. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
PERIPHERY. n. s. [περι and φειρα; peripherie, Fr.] Circumference.
Neither is this sole vital faculty sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery or outward parts. Harvey.
To PERIPHERASE. v. a. [periphrazer, Fr.] To express one word by many; to express by circumlocution.
PERIPHRASES. n. s. [περιφρασεις; periphraze, Fr.] Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one: as, for death, we may say, the loss of life.
They make the gates of Thebes and the mouths of this river a constant periphraze for this number seven. Brown.
She contains all bliss,
And makes the world but her periphraze. Cleveland.
They

PER

They shew their learning uselessly, and make a long periphraze on every word of the book they explain. Watts.
The periphraze and circumlocutions, by which Homer expresses the single act of dying, have supplied succeeding poets with all their manners of phrasing it. Pope.
PERIPHRASTICAL. adj. [from periphraze.] Circumlocutory; expressing the sense of one word in many.
PERIPNEUMONY. n. s. [περι and πνευμων; peripneumonie, Fr.] An inflammation of the lungs.
Lungs oft imbibing phlegmatick and melancholick humours, are now and then depredated schirous, by distipation of the subtiler parts, and lapidification of the grosser that remain, or may be left indurated, through the gross reliques of peripneumonia or inflammation of the lungs. Harvey.
A peripneumony is the last fatal symptom of every disease; for no body dies without a stagnation of the blood in the lungs, which is the total extinction of breath. Arbutnot.
To PERISH. v. n. [perir, Fr. peres, Lat.] 1. To die; to be destroyed; to be lost; to come to nothing.
I burn, I pine, I perish, Shakefp.
If I achieve not this young modest girl.
If I have seen any perish for want of cloathing, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade. Job xxxi. 29.
He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword. Job xxxiii. 18.
They perish quickly from off the good land. Deut. xi. 18.
I perish with hunger. Luke xv. 17.
The sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth to perish without assistance or pity. Locke.
Characters drawn on dust, that the first breath of wind effaces, are altogether as useful as the thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking. Locke.
Exposing their children, and leaving them in the fields to perish by want, has been the practice. Locke.
Still when the lust of tyrant pow'r succeeds,
Some Athens perishes, or some Tully bleeds. Pope.
In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had caused the death of so many Grecians; and in the Odyssey, the subjects perished through their own fault. Pope.
2. To be in a perpetual state of decay.
Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of perishing distance, of which no two parts exist together, but follow in succession; as expansion is the idea of lasting distance, all whose parts exist together. Locke.
3. To be lost eternally.
These, as natural brute beasts made to be destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not, and shall utterly perish. 2 Peter ii. 12.
O suffer me not to perish in my sins, Lord carest thou not that I perish, who wilt that all should be saved, and that none should perish. Moreton's Daily Exercise.
To PERISH. v. a. To destroy; to decay. Not in use.
The splitting rocks cow'r'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy finny heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret. Shakefp. Henry VI.
Rite, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.
He was so reserved, that he would impart his secrets to nobody; whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understandings. Collier on Friendship.
Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the publick woe forget your own,
You weep not for a perish'd lord alone. Pope.
PERISHABLE. adj. [from perish.] Liable to perish; subject to decay; of short duration.
We derogate from his eternal power to ascribe to them the same dominion over our immortal souls, which they have over all bodily substances and perishable natures. Kalrigh.
To these purposes nothing can so much contribute as medals of undoubted authority not perishable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addison.
It is princes greatest present felicity to reign in their subjects hearts; but these are too perishable to preserve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful historians. Swift.
Human nature could not sustain the reflection of having all its schemes and expectations to determine with this frail and perishable composition of flesh and blood. Rogers.
Thrice has he seen the perishable kind Of men decay. Pope's Odyssey.
PERISHABLENESS. n. s. [from perishable.] Liablefness to be destroyed; liablefness to decay.
Suppose an island separate from all commerce, but having nothing because of its commonfness and perishablefness, fit to supply the place of money; what reason could any have to enlarge his possessions beyond the use of his family. Locke.
PERISTALTICK. adj. [περισταλτικω; peristaltique, Fr.] Peristaltick motion is that vermicular motion of the guts, which is made by the contraction of the spiral fibres, whereby the excrements are pressed downwards and voided. Quincy.

PER

The peristaltick motion of the guts, and the continual expression of the fluids, will not suffer the least matter to be applied to one point the least instant. Arbutnot.
PERISTERION. n. s. The herb vervain. Diels.
PERISTYLE. n. s. [peristyle, Fr.] A circular range of pillars.
The Villa Gordiana had a peristyle of two hundred pillars. Arbutnot on Coins.
PERISYSTOLE. n. s. [περι and συστολη.] The pause or interval betwixt the two motions of the heart or pulse; namely, that of the systole or contraction of the heart, and that of diastole or dilatation. Diels.
PERITONEUM. n. s. [περιτόναιον; peritone, Fr.] This lies immediately under the muscles of the lower belly, and is a thin and soft membrane, which encloses all the bowels contained in the lower belly, covering all the inside of its cavity. Diels.
Wounds penetrating into the belly, are such as reach no farther inward than to the peritoneum. Wifeman.
PERJURE. n. s. [perjurus, Lat.] A perjured or forsworn person. A word not in use.
Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjure, thou simular of virtue,
Thou art incestuous. Shakefp. King Lear.
To PERJURE. v. a. [perjuro, Lat.] To iorfwear; to taint with perjury. It is used with the reciprocal pronoun.
Who should be trusted now, when the right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Shakefp.
The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for perjured persons. 1 Tim. i. 10.
PERJURER. n. s. [from perjure.] One that swears falsely.
The common oath of the Scythians was by the sword and fire; for that they accounted those two special divine powers, which should work vengeance on the perjurers. Spenser.
PERJURY. n. s. [perjurium, Lat.] False oath.
My great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Cried aloud — What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence,
And so he vanish'd. Shakefp. Richard III.
PERIWIG. n. s. [peruque, Fr.] Adscitious hair; hair not natural, worn by way of ornament or concealment of baldness.
Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig. Shakefp.
It offends me to hear a robusceous periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakespeare.
The sun's Dishevel'd beams and scatter'd fires
Serve but for ladies periwigs and tires
In lovers fonnets. Donne.
Madam meet, be ever bald,
I'll not thy periwig be call'd.
For vailing of their visages his highness and the marquis bought each a periwig, somewhat too overshadow their foreheads. Wotton.
They used false hair or periwigs. Arbutnot on Coins.
From her own head Megara takes
A periwig of twisted snakes,
Which in the nicest fashion curl'd,
Like toupets. Swift's Miscellanies.
To PERIWIG. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in false hair.
Now when the winter's keener breath began
To crystallize the Baltick ocean,
To glaze the lakes, to bridle up the floods,
And periwig with snow the bald-pate woods. Sylvestre.
Near the door an entrance gapes,
Crowded round with antick shapes,
Discord periwig'd with snakes,
See the dreadful strides fine takes. Swift's Miscellanies.
PERIWINKLE. n. s. 1. A small shell fish; a kind of fish shell.
Thetis is represented by a lady of a brownish complexion, her hair dishevel'd about her shoulders, upon her head a coronet of periwinkle and ecalop shells. Peacocks.
2. A plant.
The periwinkle hath a flower cup, consisting of one leaf, that is divided into five long narrow segments: the flower also consists of one leaf, which expands in form of a salver, and is cut into five broad segments: the pointal, which arises from the center of the flower cup, becomes a fruit composed of two husks or pods, which contain oblong, cylindrical, furrowed seeds; to which may be added, that this plant shoots out many long creeping branches that strike out roots at their joints. Miller.
There are in use, for the prevention of the cramp, bands of green periwinkle tied about the calf of the leg. Bacon.
The common simples with us are comfrey, bugle, ladies mantle, and periwinkle. Wifeman's Surgery.
To PERKE.

PER

TO PERK. v. n. [from perch, Skinner.] To hold up the head with an affected briskness.
If you think it a disgrace,
That Edward's mits thus perks it in your face,
To see a piece of failing flesh and blood,
Let the modest matrons of the town
Come here in crowds, and stare the strumpet down. Pope.
TO PERK. v. a. To dress; to prank.
'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glittering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
PERK. adj. Pert; brisk; airy. Obsolete.
My ragged ronts
Wont in the wind, and wag their wriggle tails,
Peck as a peacock, but nought avails. Spenser.
PERILOUS. adj. [from perilous.] Dangerous; full of hazard.
A perilous passage lies,
Where many marenmaids haunt, making false melodies. Spenser's Fairy Queen.
Late he far'd
In Phædræ's fleet bark over the perilous shard. Fa. Queen.
PERMACY. n. f. A little Turkish boot. Diſt.
PERMANENCE. n. f. [from permanent.] Duration; continuance.
PERMANENCY. n. f. [from permanent.] Duration; continuance in the same state; lastingness.
Salt, they say, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended together, but would remain imcompact. Boyle.
Shall I dispute whether there be any such material being that hath such a permanency or fixedness in being. Hale.
From the permanency and immutability of nature hitherto, they argued its permanency and immutability for the future. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Such a punctum to our conceptions is almost equivalent to permanency and rest. Bentley.
PERMANENT. adj. [from permanent, Fr. permanens, Lat.] Durable; not decaying; unchanged.
If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableness in the laws which God hath made, then must all laws which he hath made be necessarily forever permanent, though they be but of circumstance only. Hooker, b. iii. f. 10.
That eternal duration should be at once, is utterly unceivable, and that one permanent instant should be commensurate or rather equal to all successions of ages. More.
Pure and unchang'd, and needing no defence
From fins, as did my frailer innocence;
Their joy sincere, and with no more sorrow mixt,
Eternity stands permanent and fixt. Dryden.
PERMANENTLY. adv. [from permanent.] Durably; lastingly.
It does, like a compact or consistent body, deny to mingle permanently with the contiguous liquor. Boyle.
PERMANSSION. n. f. [from permanere, Lat.] Continuance.
Although we allow that hares may exchange their sex sometimes, yet not in that vicissitude it is presumed; from female unto male, and from male to female again, and so in a circle without a permanission in either. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERMEABLE. adj. [from permeo, Lat.] Such as may be pass'd through.
The pores of a bladder are not easily permeable by air. Boyle.
TO PERMEATE. v. a. [from permeo, Lat.] To pass through.
This heat evaporates and elevates the water of the abyss, pervading not only the fibres, but the very bodies of the strata, permeating the interstices of the sand or other matter whereof they consist. Woodward's Natural History.
PERMEANT. adj. [from permeans, Lat.] Passing through.
It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts at the mouths of the mefericks. Brown.
PERMEATION. n. f. [from permeate.] The act of passing through.
PERMISSIBLE. adj. [from permissus, Lat.] Such as may be mingled.
PERMISSIBLE. adj. [from permissus, Lat.] What may be permitted.
PERMISSION. n. f. [from permissio, Fr. permissus, Lat.] Allowance; grant of liberty.
With thy permission then, and thus forewarn'd,
The willing I go. Milton.
You have given me your permission for this address, and encouraged me by your perusal and approbation. Dryden.
PERMISSIVE. adj. [from permittere, Lat.]
1. Granting liberty, not favour; not hindering, though not approving.
We bid this be done,
When civil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment. Shakefp. Measure for Measure.
Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks
Invisible, except to God alone
By his permissive will, through heav'n and earth. Milton.
2. Granted; suffered without hindrance; not authorized or favoured.
If this doth authorize usury, which before was but permissive,

PER

it is better to mitigate usury by declaration, than to suffer it to rage by connivance. Bacon's Essays.
Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom us'd
Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton's Par. Lost.
Clad
With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton's Par. Lost.
PERMISSIVELY. adv. [from permissive.] By bare allowance; without hindrance.
As to a war for the propagation of the christian faith, I would be glad to hear spoken concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes to design it. Bacon's Holy War.
PERMISSION. n. f. [from permittere, Lat.] The act of mixing.
TO PERMIT. v. a. [from permittere, Lat. permittere, Fr.]
1. To allow without command.
What things God doth neither command nor forbid, the same he permitteth with approbation either to be done or left undone. Hooker, b. ii. f. 4.
2. To suffer, without authorizing or approving.
3. To allow; to suffer.
Women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak. 1 Corinthians xiv. 34.
Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystick wonders of your silent state. Dryden.
Age oppresses us by the same degrees that it instructs us, and permits not that our mortal members, which are frozen with our years, should retain the vigour of our youth. Dryden.
We should not permit an allowed, possible, great and weighty good to slip out of our thoughts, without leaving any relish, any desire of itself there. Locke.
After men have acquired as much as the laws permit them, they have nothing to do but to take care of the publick. Swift.
4. To give up; to resign.
Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st,
Live well; how long, how short, permit to heav'n. Milton.
If the course of truth be permitted unto itself, it cannot escape many errors. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To the gods permit the rest. Dryden.
Whate'r can urge ambitious youth to fight,
She pompously displays before their fight;
Laws, empire, all permitted to the sword. Dryden.
Let us not aggravate our sorrows,
But to the gods permit th' event of things. Addison's Cato.
PERMIT. n. f. A written permission from an officer for transporting of goods from place to place, showing the duty on them to have been paid.
PERMITTANCE. n. f. [from permittere.] Allowance; forbearance of opposition; permission. A bad word.
When this system of air comes, by divine permittance, to be corrupted by poisonous acrimonious steams, what havoc is made in all living creatures? Derham's Physico-Theology.
PERMIXTION. n. f. [from permixtus, Lat.] The act of mingling; the state of being mingled.
They fell into the opposite extremity of one nature in Christ, the divine and human natures in Christ, in their conceits, by permixtion and confusion of substances, and of properties growing into one upon their adunation. Brewster.
PERMUTATION. n. f. [from permutatio, Fr. permutatio, Lat.] Exchange of one for another.
A permutation of number is frequent in languages. Bentley.
Gold and silver, by their rarity, are wonderfully fitted for this use of permutation for all sorts of commodities. Ray.
TO PERMUTE. v. a. [from permutare, Lat. permutare, Fr.] To exchange.
PERMUTER. n. f. [from permutare, Fr. from permutare.] An exchanger; he who permutes.
PERNICIOUS. adj. [from perniciosus, Lat. perniciosus, Fr.]
1. Mischievous in the highest degree; destructive.
To remove all out of the church, whereto they shew themselves to be sorrowful, would be, as we are persuaded, hurtful, if not pernicious thereunto. Hooker, b. iv. f. 10.
I call you fervile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakefp. King Lear.
Let this pernicious hour
Stand ay accursed in the calendar! Shakefp.
2. [From pernix, Latin.] Quick. An use which I have found only in Milton, and which, as it produces an ambiguity, ought not to be imitated.
Part incentive reed
Provide, pernicious with one touch to fire. Milton.
PERNICIOUSLY. adv. [from perniciosus.] Destructively; mischievously; ruinously.
Some wilful wits willingly against their own knowledge, perniciously against their own conscience, have openly taught. Asham's Schoolmaster.
All the commons
Hate him perniciously, and wish him
Ten tathom deep. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
PERNICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from perniciosus.] The quality of being pernicious.
PERNICITY.

PER

PERNICITY. n. f. [from pernix.] Swiftneſs; celerity.
Others armed with hard shells, others with prickles, the rest that have no such armature endued with great swiftneſs or pernicity. Ray on the Creation.
PERORATION. n. f. [from peroratio, Lat.] The conclusion of an oration.
What means this passionate discourse?
This peroration with such circumstances?
True woman to the last—my peroration
I come to speak in spite of suffocation. Shakefp.
TO PERPEND. v. a. [from perpendo, Lat.] To weigh in the mind; to consider attentively.
Thus it remains and the remainder thus;
Perpend, my princeſs, and give ear. Shakefp. Hamlet.
Consider the different conceits of men, and duly perpend the imperfection of their discoveries. Brown.
PERPENDER. n. f. [from perpendere, Fr.] A coping stone.
PERPENDIC. n. f. [from perpendiculus, Fr. perpendiculum, Lat.] Any thing hanging down by a straight line. Diſt.
PERPENDICULAR. adj. [from perpendiculus, Fr. perpendicularis, Latin.]
1. Crossing any other line at right angles. Of two lines, if one be perpendicular, the other is perpendicular too.
If in a line oblique their atoms rove,
Or in a perpendicular they move;
If some advance not slower in their race,
And some more swift, how could they be entangl'd. Blackmore.
The angle of incidence, is that angle, which the line, described by the incident ray, contains with the perpendicular to the reflecting or refracting surface at the point of incidence. Newton's Opticks.
2. Cutting the horizon at right angles.
Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERPENDICULAR. n. f. A line crossing the horizon at right angles.
Though the quantity of water thus rising and falling be nearly constant as to the whole, yet it varies in the several parts of the globe; by reason that the vapours float in the atmosphere, and are not reforded down again in a perpendicular upon the same precise tract of land. Woodward.
PERPENDICULARLY. adv. [from perpendicular.]
1. In such a manner as to cut another line at right angles.
2. In the direction of a straight line up and down.
Ten masts attach make not the altitude reach,
Which thou hast perpendicularly fall'n. Shakefp.
Irons refrigerated North and South, not only acquire a directive faculty, but if cooled upright and perpendicularly, they will also obtain the same. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Shoot up an arrow perpendicularly downward. Ray.
All weights naturally move perpendicularly downward. Ray.
PERPENDICULARITY. n. f. [from perpendicular.] The state of being perpendicular.
The meeting of two lines is the primary essential mode or difference of an angle; the perpendicularity of these lines is the difference of a right angle. Watts's Logic.
PERPENSION. n. f. [from perpendere.] Consideration. Not in use.
Unto reasonable perpensions it hath no place in some sciences. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO PERPETRATE. v. a. [from perpetrare, Lat. perpetrare, Fr.]
1. To commit; to act. Always in an ill sense.
Hear of such a crime
As tragick poets, since the birth of time,
Ne'er feign'd a thronging audience to amaze;
But true and perpetrated in our days. Tate's Juvenal.
My tender infants or my careful fire,
These they returning will to death require,
Will perpetrate on them the first design,
And take the forfeit of their heads for mine. Dryden.
The forest, which in after-times,
Fierce Romulus, for perpetrated crimes,
A sacred refuge made. Dryden.
2. It is used by Butler in a neutral sense, in compliance with his verse, but not properly.
Success, the mark no mortal wit,
Or surest hand can always hit;
For whatso'er we perpetrate,
We do but row, we're steer'd by fate. Hudibras.
PERPETRATION. n. f. [from perpetrare.]
1. The act of committing a crime.
A desperate discontented assassin would, after the perpetration, have honested a meer private revenge. Watson.
A woman, who lends an ear to a seducer, may be infernally drawn into the perpetration of the most violent acts. Clarissa.
2. A bad action.
The strokes of divine vengeance, or of men's own consciences, always attend injurious perpetrations. King Charles.
PERPETUAL. adj. [from perpetuus, Fr. perpetuus, Latin.]
1. Never ceasing; eternal with respect to futurity.

PER

Mine is a love, which must perpetual be;
If you can be so just as I am true. Dryden.
2. Continual; uninterrupted; perennial.
Within those banks rivers now
Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train. Milton.
By the muscular motion and perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbutnot.
3. Perpetual screw. A screw which acts against the teeth of a wheel, and continues its action without end.
A perpetual screw hath the motion of a wheel and the force of a screw, being both infinite. Wilkin's Math. Magick.
PERPETUALLY. adv. [from perpetuus.] Constantly; continually; incessantly.
This verse is every where sounding the very thing in your ears; yet the numbers are perpetually varied, so that the same sounds are never repeated twice. Dryden.
In passing from them to great distances, doth it not grow denser and denser perpetually; and thereby cause the gravity of those great bodies towards one another. Newton's Opticks.
The bible and common prayer book in the vulgar tongue, being perpetually read in churches, have proved a kind of standard for language, especially to the common people. Swift.
TO PERPETUATE. v. a. [from perpetuare, Fr. perpetuare, Lat.]
1. To make perpetual; to preserve from extinction; to eternalize.
Medals, that are at present only mere curiosities, may be of use in the ordinary commerce of life, and at the same time perpetuate the glories of her majesty's reign. Addison.
Man cannot devise any other method so likely to preserve and perpetuate the knowledge and belief of a revelation, so necessary to mankind. Forbes.
2. To continue without cessation or intermission.
What is it, but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, rebounding for ever in our ears? to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, 'till they awake from their lethargick sleep and arise from so moriferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hammond.
PERPETUATION. n. f. [from perpetuare.] The act of making perpetual; incessant continuance.
Nourishing hair upon the moles of the face, is the perpetuation of a very ancient custom. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PERPETUITY. n. f. [from perpetuus, Fr. perpetuus, Lat.]
1. Duration to all futurity.
For men to alter those laws, which God for perpetuity hath established, were presumption most intolerable. Hooker.
Yet am I better Than one that's sick o' th' gout, since he had rather Groan so in perpetuity, than be cur'd
By the sure physician, death. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
Time as long again
Would be fill'd up with our thanks;
And yet we should, for perpetuity,
Go hence in debt. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
Nothing wanted to his noble and heroic intentions, but only to give perpetuity to that which was in his time so happily established. Bacon.
2. Exemption from intermission or cessation.
A cycle or period begins again as often as it ends, and so obtains a perpetuity. Holder.
3. Something of which there is no end.
A morsel of pottage for a birth-right, a present repast for a perpetuity. South's Sermons.
The ennobling property of the pleasure, that accrues to a man from religion, is, that he that has the property, may be also sure of the perpetuity. South's Sermons.
The laws of God as well as of the land
Abhor a perpetuity should stand;
Estates have wings, and hang in fortune's power. Pope.
TO PERPLEX. v. a. [from perplexus, Latin.]
1. To disturb with doubtful notions; to entangle; to make anxious; to tease with suspense or ambiguity; to distract; to embarrass; to puzzle.
Being greatly perplexed in his mind, he determined to go into Persia. Mac. iii. 31.
Themselves with doubts they day and night perplex. Demb.
He perplexes the minds of the fair sex with nice speculations of philosophy, when he should engage their hearts. Dryden.
We can distinguish no general truths, or at least shall be apt to perplex the mind. Locke.
2. To make intricate; to involve; to complicate.
Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood. Milt.
We both are involv'd
In the same intricate perplex'd distress. Addison's Cato.
What was thought obscure, perplexed, and too hard for our weak parts, will lie open to the understanding in a fair view. Locke.
3. To plague; to torment; to vex. A sense not proper.
Chloe's the wonder of her sex,
'Tis well her heart is tender,
How might such killing eyes perplex,
With virtue to defend her. Granville.

PER

PERPLEX. adj. [perplex, Lat. perplexus, Lat.] Intricate; difficult. Perplexed is the word in use.
How the soul directs the spirits for the motion of the body, according to the several animal exigents, is perplex in the theory. Glanville's Scept.

PERPLEXEDLY. adv. [from perplexed.] Intricately; with involution.

PERPLEXEDNESS. n. f. [from perplexed.]
1. Embarrassment; anxiety.
2. Intricacy; involution; difficulty.
Obscurity and perplexedness have been cast upon St. Paul's Epistles from without. Locke.

PERPLEXITY. n. f. [perplexité, Fr.]
1. Anxiety; distraction of mind.
The fear of him ever since hath put me into such perplexity, as now you found me. Sidney, b. ii.
Perplexity not suffering them to be idle, they think and do, as it were, in a phrensy. Hooker, b. v. f. 3.
The royal virgin, which beheld from far,
In pensive plight and sad perplexity,
The whole achievement of this doubtful war,
Came running fast to greet his victory. Fairy Queen.

2. Entanglement; intricacy.
Let him look for the labyrinth; for I cannot discern any, unless in the perplexity of his own thoughts. Stillington.

PERPOTATION. n. f. [per and poté, Latin.] The act of drinking largely.

PERQUISITE. n. f. [perquisitus, Lat.] Something gained by a place or office over and above the settled wages.
Tell me, perfidious, was it fit
To make my cream a perquisite,
And steal to mend your wages. Widow and Cat.
To an honest mind, the best perquisites of a place are the advantages it gives a man of doing good. Addison.
To what your lawful perquisites amount. Swift.

PERQUISITION. n. f. [perquisitus, Lat.] An accurate enquiry; a thorough search. Ainsworth.

PERRY. n. f. [poire, Fr. from poire.] Cyder made of pears.
Perry is the next liquor in esteem after cyder, in the ordering of which, let not your pears be over ripe before you grind them; and with some sorts of pears, the mixing of a few crabs in the grinding is of great advantage, making perry equal to the redstreak cyder. Mortimer.

TO PERSECUTE. v. a. [persecutor, Fr. persecutus, Lat.]
1. To harass with penalties; to persecute with malignity. It is generally used of penalties inflicted for opinions. Acts xxii. 4.
I persecuted this way unto the death. Acts xxii. 4.
2. To persecute with repeated acts of vengeance or enmity.
They might have fallen down, being persecuted of vengeance, and scattered abroad. Wisdom xi. 20.

Relate,
For what offence the queen of heav'n began
To persecute to brave, to just a man! Dryden.

3. To importune much: as, he persecutes me with daily solicitations.

PERSECUTION. n. f. [persecutio, Fr. persecutio, Lat. from persecute.]
1. The act or practice of persecuting.
The Jews raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them. Acts xiii. 50.
Heavy persecution shall arise
On all, who in the worship persevere
Of spirit and truth. Milton.
The deaths and sufferings of the primitive christians had a great share in the conversion of those learned Pagans, who lived in the ages of persecution. Addison.

2. The state of being persecuted.
Our necks are under persecution; we labour and have no rest. Lam. v. 5.
Christian fortitude and patience had their opportunity in times of affliction and persecution. Sprat's Sermons.

PERSECUTOR. n. f. [persecutor, Fr. from persecute.] One who harasses others with continued malignity.
What man can do against them, not afraid,
Though to the death; against such cruelties
With inward consolations recompens'd;
And oft supported so, as shall amaze
Their proudest persecutors. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Henry rejected the pope's supremacy, but retained every corruption besides, and became a cruel persecutor. Swift.

PERSEVERANCE. n. f. [perseverance, Fr. perseverantia, Lat.]
1. Perseverance in any design or attempt; steadiness in pursuits; constancy in progress. It is applied alike to good and ill.
The king becoming graces,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness;
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Perseverance keeps honour bright:
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion.
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery.
They hate repentance more than perseverance in a fault. Shakespeare, King Charles.

PER

Wait the seasons of providence with patience and perseverance in the duties of our calling, what difficulties soever we may encounter. L'Estrange.

Patience and perseverance overcome the greatest difficulties. Clarissa.

And perseverance with his batter'd shield.

PERSEVERANT. adj. [perseverant, Fr. perseverans, Lat.] Persevering; constant. Ainsworth.

TO PERSEVERE. v. n. [persevere, Lat. perseverare, Fr.] This word was anciently accented less properly on the second syllable. To persevere in an attempt; not to give over; not to quit the design.
But my rude musick, which was wont to please
Some dainty ears, cannot with any skill
The dreadful tempest of her wrath appease, Nor move the dolphin from her stubborn will;
But in her pride she doth persevere still. Spenfer.
Thrice happy, if they know
Their happiness, and persevere upright!
Thus beginning, thus we persevere;
Our passions yet continue what they were. Milton.
To persevere in any evil course, makes you unhappy in this life, and will certainly throw you into everlasting torments in the next. Wake's Preparation for Death.

PERSEVERINGLY. adv. [from persevere.] With perseverance.

TO PERSIST. v. n. [persiste, Lat. persistere, Fr.] To persevere; to continue firm; not to give over.
Nothing can make a man happy, but that which shall last as long as he lasts; for an immortal soul shall persist in being not only when profit, pleasure and honour, but when time itself shall cease. South's Sermons.

If they persist in pointing their batteries against particular persons, no laws of war forbid the making reprisals. Addison.

PERSISTENCE. n. f. [from persist.] Persistence seems more proper.

PERSISTENCY. n. f. [from persist.] Steady; not receding from a purpose; persevering.
The protractive trials of great Jove,
To find persistency constancy in men. Shakespeare.

PERSON. n. f. [personne, Fr. persona, Lat.]
1. Individual or particular man or woman.
A person is a thinking intelligent being, that has reason and reflection, and can consider itself as itself, the same thinking thing, in different times and places. Locke.

2. Man or woman considered as opposed to things, or distinct from them.
A zeal for persons is far more easy to be perverted, than a zeal for things. Sprat's Sermons.
To that we owe the safety of our persons and the propriety of our possessions. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Human being; considered with respect to mere corporal existence.
'Tis in her heart alone that you must reign;
You'll find her person difficult to gain. Dryden.

4. Man or woman considered as present, acting or suffering.
If I am traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person;
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
The rebels maintained the fight for a small time, and for their persons shewed no want of courage. Bacon.

5. A general loose term for a human being; one; a man.
Be a person's attainments ever so great, he should always remember, that he is God's creature. Clarissa.

6. One's self; not a representative.
When I purposed to make a war by my lieutenant, I made declaration thereof to you by my chancellor; but now that I mean to make a war upon France in person, I will declare it to you myself. Bacon's Henry VII.
The king in person visits all around,
Comforts the sick, congratulates the found,
And holds for thrice three days a royal feast. Dryden.

7. Exterior appearance.
For her own person,
It beggar'd all description. Shakespeare.

8. Man or woman represented in a fictitious dialogue.
All things are lawful unto me, faith the apostle, speaking, as it seemeth, in the person of the christian gentile for the maintenance of liberty in things indifferent. Hooker.
These tables Cicero pronounced under the person of Cælius, where of more use and authority than all the books of the philosophers. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

9. Character.
From his first appearance upon the stage, in his new person of a sycophant or juggler, instead of his former person of a prince,

PER

prince, he was exposed to the derision of the courtiers and the common people, who flocked about him, that one might know where the owl was, by the flight of birds. Bacon.
He hath put on the person not of a robber and a murderer, but of a traitor to the state. Hayward.

10. Character of office.
I then did use the person of your father;
The image of his power lay then in me:
And in th' administration of his law,
While I was busy for the commonwealth,
Your highness pleased to forget my place. Shakespeare.
How different is the same man from himself, as he sustains the person of a magistrate and that of a friend. South.

11. [In grammar.] The quality of the noun that modifies the verb.
Dorus the more blushed at her smiling, and she the more smiled at his blushing; because he had, with the remembrance of that plight he was in, forgot in speaking of himself the third person. Sidney.
If speaking of himself in the first person singular has so various meanings, his use of the first person plural is with greater latitude. Locke.

PERSONABLE. adj. [from person.]
1. Handsome; graceful; of good appearance.
Were it true that her son Nimias had such a stature, as that Simiramis, who was very personable, could be taken for him; yet it is unlikely that she could have held the empire forty-two years after by any such subtlety. Raleigh.

2. [In law.] One that may maintain any plea in a judicial court. Ainsworth.

PERSONAGE. n. f. [personage, Fr.]
1. A considerable person; man or woman of eminence.
It was a new light fortune had prepared to those woods, to see these great personages thus run one after the other. Sidney.
It is not easy to rehearse the actions of eminent personages, how much they have been blest by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Watson.

2. Exterior appearance; air; stature.
She hath made compare
Between our statures, the hath urg'd his height;
And with her personage, her tall personage,
She hath prevail'd with him. Shakespeare.
The lord Sudley was fierce in courage, courtly in fashion, in personage stately, in voice magnificent, but somewhat empty of matter. Hayward.

3. Character assumed.
The great diversion is masking: the Venetians, naturally grave, love to give into the follies of such seasons, when disguised in a false personage. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

4. Character represented.
Some persons must be found out, already known by history, whom we may make the actors and personages of this fable. Brome's View of Epic Poems.

PERSONAL. adj. [personal, Fr. personalis, Lat.]
1. Belonging to men or women, not to things; not real.
Every man so termed by way of personal difference only. Hooker, b. v. f. 13.

2. Affecting individuals or particular people; peculiar; proper to him or her; relating to one's private actions or character.
For my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him;
But for the general. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
It could not mean, that Cain as elder had a natural dominion over Abel, for the words are conditional; if thou doest well, and so personal to Cain. Locke.
Publick reproofs of sin are general, though by this they lose a great deal of their effect; but in private conversations the application may be more personal, and the proofs when so directed come home. Rogers.

3. Present; not acting by representative.
The fav'rites that the absent king
In deputation left,
When he was personal in the Irish war. Shakespeare.

4. Exterior; corporal.
This heroic constancy determined him to desire in marriage a princess, whose personal charms were now become the least part of her character. Addison.

5. [In law.] Something moveable; something appendant to the person, as money; not real, as land.
This sin of kind not personal
But real and hereditary was. Davies.

6. [In grammar.] A personal verb is that which has all the regular modification of the three persons; opposed to impersonal that has only the third.
The existence or individuality of any one.
Person belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery: this personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness, whereby it imputes to itself past actions, just upon the same ground that it does the present. Locke.

PERSONALLY. adv. [from personal.]
1. In person; in presence; not by representative.
Approbation not only they give, who personally declare their assent by voice, sign or act, but also when others do it in their names. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman
I sent your message. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
There are many reasons, why matters of such a wonderful nature should not be taken notice of by those Pagan writers, who lived before our Saviour's disciples had personally appeared among them. Addison.

2. With respect to an individual; particularly.
She bore a mortal hatred to the house of Lancaster, and personally to the king. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. With regard to numerical existence.
The converted man is personally the same he was before, and is neither born nor created anew in a proper literal sense. Rogers's Sermons.

TO PERSONATE. v. a. [from persona, Latin.]
1. To represent by a fictitious or assumed character, so as to pass for the person represented.
This lad was not to personate one, that had been long before taken out of his cradle, but a youth that had been brought up in a court, where infinite eyes had been upon him. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To represent by action or appearance; to act.
Herself a while she lays aside, and makes Ready to personate a mortal part. Crashaw.

3. To pretend hypocritically, with the reciprocal pronoun.
It has been the constant practice of the Jesuits to send over emissaries, with instructions to personate themselves members of the several sects amongst us. Swift.

4. To counterfeit; to feign. Little in use.
Piety is opposed to that personated devotion, under which any kind of impiety is disguised. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Thus have I played with the dogmatist in a personated scepticism. Glanville's Scept.

5. To resemble.
The lofty cedar personates thee. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

6. To make a representative of, as in picture. Out of use.
Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fixt,
One do I personate of Timon's frame,
Whom fortune with her iv'ry hand wafts to her. Shakespeare.

7. To describe. Out of use.
I am thinking, what I shall say; it must be a personating of himself; a satire against the softness of prosperity. Shakespeare.
I will drop in his way some obscure epistles
Of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the Shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the Expressure of his eye, forehead and complexion,
He shall find himself most feelingly personated. Shakespeare.

PERSONATION. n. f. [from personate.] Counterfeiting of another person.
This being one of the strangest examples of a personation that ever was, it deserveth to be discovered and related at the full. Bacon's Henry VII.

PERSONIFICATION. n. f. [from personify.] Personification; the change of things to persons: as, Confusion heard his voice. Milton.

TO PERSONIFY. v. a. [from person.] To change from a thing to a person.

PERSPECTIVE. n. f. [perspectif, Fr. perspicio, Lat.]
1. A glass through which things are viewed.
If it tend to danger, they turn about the perspective, and shew it so little, that he can scarce discern it. Denham.
It may import us in this calm, to hearken to the storms raising abroad; and by the best perspectives, to discover from what coast they break. Temple.
You hold the glass, but turn the perspective,
And farther off the lessen'd object drive. Dryden.
Faith for reason's glimmering light shall give Her immortal perspective. Prior.

2. The science by which things are ranged in picture, according to their appearance in their real situation.
Medals have represented their buildings according to the rules of perspective. Addison on Ancient Medals.

3. View; vizio.
Lofty trees, with sacred shades,
And perspectives of pleasant glades,
Where nymphs of brightest form appear. Dryden.

PERSPECTIVE. adj. Relating to the science of vision; optick; optical.
We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations; and out of things uncoloured and transparent, we can represent unto you all several colours. Bacon.

PERSPICACIOUS. adj. [perspicax, Lat.] Quick-sighted; sharp of sight.

PERSUASION. n. f. [from perſuaſio, Fr. from perſuadeo, Lat.]

1. The act of perſuading; the act of influencing by expoſtulation; the act of gaining or attempting the paſſions.

If I prove thy fortune, Polydore, to conquer,
 For thou haſt all the arts of fine perſuaſion, Truſt me, and let me know thy love's ſucceſs. Orang.

2. The ſtate of being perſuaded; opinion.

The moſt certain token of evident goodneſs is, if the general perſuaſion of all men does to account it.

You are a great deal abuſ'd in too bold a perſuaſion. Shakeſp.

When we have no other certainty of being in the right, but our own perſuaſions that we are ſo; this may often be but making one error the gage for another. Gov. of the Tongue.

The obedient and the men of practice ſhall ride upon thoſe clouds, and triumph over their preſent imperfections; till perſuaſion paſs into knowledge, and knowledge advance into aſſurance, and all come at length to be completed in the beatific viſion. South's Sermons.

PERSUASIVE. adj. [from perſuaſivus, Fr. from perſuadeo.] Having the power of perſuading; having influence on the paſſions.

In prayer, we do not ſo much reſpect what precepts art delivereth, touching the method of perſuaſive utterance in the preſence of great men, as what doth moſt avail to our own edification in piety and godly zeal. Haker.

Let Martius reſume his farther diſcourſe, as well for the perſuaſive as for the conſult, touching the means that may conduce unto the enterprize. Bacon.

Notwithſtanding the weight and ſtimulus of the arguments to perſuade, and the light of man's intellect to meet this perſuaſive evidence with a ſuitable aſſent, no aſſent followed, nor were men thereby actually perſuaded. South's Sermons.

PERSUASIVELY. adv. [from perſuaſivus.] In ſuch a manner as to perſuade.

The ſerpent with me
Perſuaſively hath ſo prevail'd, that I Have alſo taſted. Milton.

Many who live upon their eſtates cannot ſo much as tell a ſtory, much leſs ſpeak clearly and perſuaſively in any buſineſs. Locke on Education.

PERSUASIVENESS. n. f. [from perſuaſivus.] Influence on the paſſions.

An opinion of the ſucceſſfulneſs of the work being as neceſſary to found a purpoſe of undertaking it, as either the authority of commands, or the perſuaſiveneſs of promiſes, or pungency of menaces can be. Hammond's Fundamental.

PERSUASORY. adj. [from perſuaſivus, Lat. from perſuadeo.] Having the power to perſuade.

Neither is this perſuaſory. Brown.

PERT. adj. [from pertinax, Lat. from perterebratio, Lat.]

1. Lively; brisk; ſmart.

Awake the pert and nimble ſpirit of mirth;
 Turn melancholy forth to funerals. Shakeſp.

On the tawny ſands and ſhelves,
 Trip the pert fairies and the dapper elves. Milton.

2. Saucy; petulant; with bold and garrulous loquacity.

All ſervants might challenge the ſame liberty, and grow pert upon their maſters; and when this ſaucineſs became univerſal, what leſs miſchief could be expected than an old Scotch rebellion? Collier on Pride.

A lady bids me in a very pert manner mind my own affairs, and not pretend to meddle with their linnen. Addiſon.

Scarce liſt'ned to their idle chat,
 Further than ſometimes by a frown,
 When they grew pert, to pull them down. Swift.

TO PERTAIN. v. n. [from pertinere, Lat.] To belong; to relate.

As men hate thoſe that affect that honour by ambition, which pertaineth not to them, ſo are they much more odious, who through fear betray the glory which they have. Hayward.

A chequer or raſter of an houſe, a very honourable bearing, is never ſeen in the coat of a king, becauſe it pertaineth to a mechanical profeſſion.

PERTEREBRATION. n. f. [from perterebratio, Lat.] The act of boring through.

PERTINACIOUS. adj. [from pertinax.]

1. Obſtinate; ſtubborn; perverſely reſolute.

One of the diſtenders appeared to Dr. Sanderson to be ſo bold, ſo troubleſome and illogical in the diſpute, as forced him to ſay, that he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence and leſs abilities. Walton.

2. Reſolute; conſtant; ſteady.

Diligence is a ſteady, conſtant and pertinacious ſtudy, that naturally leads the ſoul into the knowledge of that, which at firſt ſeemed locked up from it. South's Sermons.

PERTINACIOUSLY. adv. [from pertinacius.] Obſtinately; ſtubbornly.

They deny that freedom to me, which they pertinaciously challenge to themſelves. King Charles.

Metals pertinaciously reſiſt all tranſmutation; and though one would think they were turned into a different ſubſtance, yet they do but as it were lurk under a vizard. Ray.

Others have fought to eaſe themſelves of all the evil of aſſiſion by diſputing ſubtly againſt it, and pertinaciously maintaining, that aſſiſions are no real evils, but only in imagination. Tillotſon's Sermons.

PERTINACITY. n. f. [from pertinacia, Lat. from pertinax.]

1. Obſtinacy; ſtubborneſs.

In this reply, was included a very groſs miſtake, and if with pertinacity maintained, a capital error. Brown.

2. Reſolution; conſtancy.

PERTINACY. n. f. [from pertinacia.]

1. Obſtinacy; ſtubborneſs; perſiſtency.

Their pertinacy is ſuch, that when you drive them out of one form, they aſſume another. Duppa.

PERTINENCY. n. f. [from pertinencia, Lat.] Juſtneſs of relation to the matter in hand; propriety to the purpoſe; appoſiteness.

I have ſhewn the fitneſs and pertinency of the apoſtle's diſcourſe to the perſons he addreſſed to, whereby it appeareth that he was no babbler, and did not talk at random. Bentley.

PERTINENT. adj. [from pertinens, Lat. pertinent, Fr.]

1. Related to the matter in hand; juſt to the purpoſe; not uſeleſs to the end propoſed; appoſite; not foreign from the thing intended.

My caution was more pertinent
 Than the rebuke you give it. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

I ſet down, out of experience in buſineſs, and converſation in books, what I thought pertinent to this buſineſs. Bacon.

Here I ſhall ſeem a little to digreſs, but you will by and by find it pertinent. Bacon.

If he could find pertinent treatiſes of it in books, that would reach all the particulars of a man's behaviour; his own ill-faſhioned example would ſpoil all. Locke.

2. Relating; regarding; concerning. In this ſenſe the word now uſed is pertaining.

Men ſhall have juſt cauſe, when any thing pertinent unto faith and religion is doubted of, the more willingly to incline their minds towards that which the ſentence of ſo grave, wife and learned in that faculty ſhall judge moſt found. Hooker.

PERTINENTLY. adv. [from pertinent.] Appoſitely; to the purpoſe.

2. To pass through the whole extension.
Matter, once bereaved of motion, cannot of itself acquire it again, nor till it be struck by some other body from without, or be intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance, that can penetrate and pervade it. Bentley.
What but God?
Pervades, adjuſts and agitates the whole. Thomson.
PERVA'SION. n. f. [from pervade.] The act of pervading or passing through.
If fusion be made rather by the ingreſs and tranſcurſions of the atoms of fire, than by the bare propagation of that motion, with which fire beats upon the outside of the vessels, that contain the matter to be melted; both those kinds of fluidity, ascribed to saltpetre, will appear to be caused by the pervasion of a foreign body. Boyle.
PERVERSE. adj. [from perverſus, Lat.]
1. Distorted from the right.
And nature breeds
Perverſe, all monstrous, all prodigious things. Milton.
2. Obſtinate in the wrong; stubborn; untractable.
Then for the testimony of truth haſt born Universal reproach; far worse to bear
Than violence; for this was all thy care
To stand approv'd in sight of God, though worlds Judg'd thee perverſe. Milton's Paradise Lost.
To so perverſe a sex all grace is vain,
It gives them courage to offend again. Dryden.
3. Petulant; vexatious.
Oh gentle Romeo,
If thou doſt love, pronounce it faithfully,
Or if you think I am too quickly won,
I'll frown and be perverſe, and ſay thee nay,
So thou wilt woo: but else not for the world. Shakeſp.
PERVERſELY. adv. [from perverſe.] With intent to vex; peevishly; vexatiously; spitefully; croſſly; with petty malignity.
Men perverſely take up piques and diſpleaſures at others, and then every opinion of the diſliked perſon muſt partake of his fate. Decay of Piety.
Men that do not perverſely uſe their words, or on purpoſe ſet themſelves to cavil, ſeldom miſtake the ſignification of the names of ſimple ideas. Locke.
A patriot is a dangerous poſt,
When wanted by his country moſt,
Perverſely comes in evil times,
Where virtues are imputed crimes. Swift.
PERVERſENESS. n. f. [from perverſe.]
1. Petulance; peevishneſs; ſpiteful croſſneſs.
A wholeſome tongue is a tree of life; perverſeneſs therein is a breach in the ſpirit. Proverbs xv. 4.
Virtue hath ſome perverſeneſs; for ſhe will Neither believe her good, nor others ill. Dome.
He whom he wiſhes moſt, ſhall ſeldom gain
Through her perverſeneſs; but ſhall ſee her gain'd
By a far worſe. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The perverſeneſs of my fate is ſuch,
That he's not mine, becauſe he's mine too much. Dryden.
When a friend in kindneſs tries
To ſhew you where your error lies,
Conviction does but more incenſe;
Perverſeneſs is your whole defence. Swift.
2. Perverſion; corruption. Not in uſe.
Neither can this be meant of evil governors or tyrants; for they are often eſtabliſhed as lawful potentates; but of ſome perverſeneſs and defection in the very nation itſelf. Bacon.
PERVERſION. n. f. [from perverſion, Fr. from perverſe.] The act of perverting; change to ſomething worſe.
Women to govern men, ſlaves freemen, are much in the ſame degree; all being total violations and perverſions of the laws of nature and nations. Bacon.
He ſuppoſes that whole reverend body are ſo far from diſliking popery, that the hopes of enjoying the abbey lands would be an effectual incitement to their perverſion. Swift.
PERVERſITY. n. f. [from perverſus, Fr. from perverſe.] Perverſeneſs; croſſneſs.
What ſtrange perverſity is this of man!
When 'twas a crime to taſte th' enlightning tree,
He could not then his hand refrain. Norris.
To PERVERT. v. a. [from perverti, Lat. perverti, Fr.]
1. To diſtort from the true end or purpoſe.
Inſtead of good they may work ill, and pervert juſtice to extreme injuſtice. Spenser's State of Ireland.
If thou ſeeſt the oppreſſion of the poor, and violent perverting of juſtice in a province, marvel not. Ecclef. v. 8.
If then his providence
Out of our evil ſeek to bring forth good,
Our labour muſt be to pervert that end,
And out of good ſtill to find means of evil. Milton.
He has perverted my meaning by his gloſſes; and interpreted my words into blaſphemy, of which they were not guilty. Dryden.

PES

Porphyry has wrote a volume to explain this cave of the nymphs with more piety than judgment; and another perſon has perverted it into obſcenity; and both allegorically. Broom.
2. To corrupt; to turn from the right; oppoſed to convert, which is to turn from the wrong to the right.
The heinous and deſpiteful act
Of Satan, done in Paradife, and how He in the ſerpent had perverted Eve,
Her husband ſhe, to taſte the fatal fruit,
Was known in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.
PERVERTER. n. f. [from pervert.]
1. One that changes any thing from good to bad; a corrupter.
Where a child finds his own parents his perverters, he cannot be ſo properly born, as damned into the world. South.
2. One who diſtorts any thing from the right purpoſe.
He that reads a prohibition in a divine law, had need be well ſatiſfied about the ſenſe he gives it, left he incur the wrath of God, and be found a perverter of his law. Stillingſ.
PERVERTIBLE. adj. [from pervert.] That may be eaſily perverted.
PERVICACIOUS. adj. [from pervicax, Lat.] Spitefully obſtinate; peeviſhly contumacious.
May private devotions be efficacious upon the mind of one of the moſt pervicacious young creatures! Clariffa.
PERVICACIOUSLY. adv. [from pervicacious.] With ſpiteful obſtinacy.
PERVICACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from pervicacia, Lat. from pervicacius.] Spiteful obſtinacy.
PERVICACITY. n. f. [from pervicacia, Lat. from pervicacius.] Spiteful obſtinacy.
PERVIOUS. adj. [from pervius, Latin.]
1. Admitting paſſage; capable of being permeated.
The Egyptians uſed to ſay, that unknown darkneſs is the fiſt principle of the world; by darkneſs they mean God, whoſe ſecrets are pervious to no eye. Taylor.
Leda's twins
Conſpicuous both, and both in act to throw
Their trembling lances brandiſh'd at the foe,
Nor had they miſ'd; but he to thickets fled, Conceal'd from aiming ſpears, not pervious to the ſteed. Dryden.
Thoſe lodged in other earth, more lax and pervious, decayed in tract of time, and rotted at length. Woodward.
2. Pervading; permeating. This ſenſe is not proper.
What is this little, agile, pervious fire,
This flutt'ring motion which we call the mind? Prior.
PERVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from pervius.] Quality of admitting a paſſage.
The perviousneſs of our receiver to a body much more ſubtile than air, proceeded partly from the looſer texture of that glaſs the receiver was made of, and partly from the enormous heat, which opened the pores of the glaſs. Boyle.
There will be found another difference beſides that of perviousneſs.
PERU'KE. n. f. [from peruque, Fr.] A cap of falſe hair; a perwig.
I put him on a linen cap, and his peruke over that. Wifeman.
To PERU'KE. v. a. [from the noun.] To dreſs in aduſtious hair.
PERU'KEMAKER. n. f. [from peruke and maker.] A maker of perukes; a wig-maker.
PERU'SAL. [from peruſe.] The act of reading.
As pieces of miniature muſt be allowed a cloſer inſpection, ſo this treatiſe requires application in the peruſal. Woodward.
If upon a new peruſal you think it is written in the very ſpirit of the ancients, it deſerves your care, and is capable of being improved. Aitkenbury.
To PERU'SE. v. a. [from peruſe and uſe.]
1. To read.
Peruſe this writing here, and thou ſhalt know
The treaſon. Shakeſp. Richard II.
The petitions being thus prepared, do you conſtantly ſet apart an hour in a day to peruſe thoſe petitions. Bacon.
Carefully obſerve, whether he taſtes the diſtinguiſhing perfections or the ſpecific qualities of the author whom he peruſes. Addiſon's Spectator, N° 409.
2. To obſerve; to examine.
I hear the enemy;
Out ſome light horſemen, and peruſe their wings. Shakeſp.
I've peruſ'd her well;
Beauty and honour in her are ſo mingled,
That they have caught the king. Shakeſp.
Myſelf I then peruſ'd, and limb by limb Survey'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
PERU'SER. n. f. [from peruſe.] A reader; examiner.
The difficulties and heſitations of every one will be according to the capacity of each peruſer, and as his penetration into nature is greater or leſs. Woodward.
PESADE. n. f.
Pesade is a motion a horſe makes in raiſing or liſting up his forequarters, keeping his hind legs upon the ground without ſtirring. Farrier's Dict.

Of all virtues juſtice is the beſt;
Valour without it is a common peſt. Waller.
To PE'STER. v. a. [from peſter, Fr.]
1. To diſturb; to perplex; to haraſs; to turmoil.
Who then ſhall blame
His peſter'd ſenſes to recoil and ſtart,
When all that is within him does condemn Itſelf for being there.
He hath not fail'd to peſter us with meſſage,
Importing the ſurrender of thoſe lands. Shakeſp.
We are peſtered with mice and rats, and to this end the cat is very ſerviceable. More's Antidote againſt Atheiſm.
They did ſo much peſter the church and groſſly delude the people, that contradictions themſelves aſſerted by Rabbies were equally revered by them as the infallible will of God. South's Sermons.
A multitude of ſcribblers daily peſter the world with their inſufferable ſtuff. Dryden.
At home he was purſu'd with noiſe;
Abroad was peſter'd by the boys. Swift.
2. To encumber.
Fitches and peafe
For peſtring too much on a hovel they lay.
Confin'd and peſter'd in this pinfold here,
Strive to keep up a frail and feveriſh being. Milton.
PE'STERER. n. f. [from peſter.] One that peſters or diſturbes.
PE'STEROUS. adj. [from peſter.] Encumbering; cumberſome.

PE'STHOUSE. n. f. [from peſt and houſe.] An hoſpital for perſons infected with the plague.
PE'STIFEROUS. adj. [from peſtifer, Lat.]
1. Deſtructive; miſchievous.
Such is thy audacious wickedneſs,
Thy leud, peſtiferous and diſſentious pranks,
The very infants prattle of thy pride.
You, that have diſcover'd ſecrets, and made ſuch peſtiferous reports of men nobly held, muſt die. Shakeſp.
2. Peſtilential; malignant; infectious.
It is eaſy to conceive how the ſteam of peſtiferous bodies taint the air, while they are alive and hot. Arbutnot.
PE'STILENCE. n. f. [from peſtilencia, Fr. peſtilentia, Lat.] Plague; peſt; contagious diſtemper.
The red peſtilence ſtrike all trades in Rome,
And occupations periſh. Shakeſp.
When my eyes beheld Olivia fiſt, Methought ſhe purg'd the air of peſtilence. Shakeſp.
PE'STILENT. adj. [from peſtilent, Fr. peſtilens, Lat.]
1. Producing plagues; malignant.
Great ringing of bells in populous cities diſſipated peſtilent air, which may be from the concuſſion of the air, and not from the ſound. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.
To thoſe people that dwell under or near the equator, a perpetual ſpring would be a moſt peſtilent and inſupportable ſummer. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Miſchievous; deſtructive.
There is nothing more contagious and peſtilent than ſome kinds of harmony; than ſome nothing more ſtrong and potent unto good. Hooker, b. v. f. 38.
Hoary moulded bread the ſoldiers thruſting upon their ſpears rail'd againſt king Ferdinand, who with ſuch corrupt and peſtilent bread would feed them. Knolles.
Which preſident, of peſtilent import,
Againſt thee, Henry, had been brought. Daniel.
The world abounds with peſtilent books, written againſt this doctrine. Swift's Miscellanies.

 Instead of shield the blow receiv'd,
 The gun recoil'd as well it might. Hudibras.

PETTICOAT. n. f. [petit and coat.] The lower part of a woman's dress. Watts.

PET

What trade art thou, Fuble?—a woman's taylor, sir.—
 Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat? Shakespeare.
 Her feet beneath her petticoat,
 Like little mice, stole in and out,
 As if they fear'd the light.
 It is a great compliment to the sex, that the virtues are generally shewn in petticoats. Suckling.
 To fifty chosen sylphs, of special note,
 We trust th' important charge, the petticoat;
 Oft have we known that sevenfold fence to fail,
 Though stiff with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale. Addison.

PETTIFOGGER. n. f. [corrupted from pettivoguer; petit and vogue, Fr.] A petty small-rate lawyer.
 The worst conditioned and least cliented pettivoguers get, under the sweet bait of revenge, more plentiful prosecution of actions. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
 Your pettivoggers damn their souls
 To share with knaves in cheating fools. Hudibras.
 Consider, my dear, how indecent it is to abandon your shop and follow pettivoggers; there is hardly a plea between two country equires about a barren acre, but you draw yourself in as bail, surety or solicitor. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
 Physicians are apt to despise empiricks, lawyers, pettivoggers, merchants and pedlars. Swift.

PETTINESS. n. f. [from petty.] Smallness; littleness; inconsiderableness; unimportance.
 The losses we have borne, the subjects we

 To answer which, his pettiness would bow under. Shakespeare.

PETTISH. adj. [from pett.] Fretful; peevish.
 Nor doth their childhood prove their innocence;
 They're froward, pettish, and unus'd to smile. Creech.

PETTISHNESS. n. f. [from pettish.] Fretfulness; peevishness.
 Like children, when we lose our favourite plaything, we throw away the rest in a fit of pettishness. Collier.

PETTISOES. n. f. [petty and toe.]
 1. The feet of a sucking pig.
 2. Feet in contempt.
 My good clown grew so in love with the wenches song,
 That he would not stir his pettisoes, till he had both tune and words. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

PETTO. [Italian.] The breast; figurative by privacy.

PETTY. adj. [petit, Fr.] Small; inconsiderable; inferior; little.
 When he had no power;
 But was a petty servant to the state, Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 He was your enemy.
 It is a common experience, that dogs know the dog-killer; when, as in time of infection, some petty fellow is sent out to kill the dogs. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 It importeth not much, some petty alteration or difference it may make. Bacon.
 Will God incense his ire
 For such a petty trespass. Milton.
 For such a thousand lesser poets sprung,
 Like petty princes from the fall of Rome. Denham.
 They believe one only chief and great God, which hath been from all eternity; who when he propos'd to make the world, made first other gods of a principal order; and after, the sun, moon and stars, as petty gods. Stillington.
 By all I have read of petty commonwealths, as well as the great ones, it seems to me, that a free people do of themselves divide into three powers. Swift.
 Bolonia water'd by the petty Rhine. Addison.
 Can there an example be given, in the whole course of this war, where we have treated the pettist prince, with whom we have had to deal, in so contemptuous a manner. Swift's Miscellaneous.

PETTCOY. n. f. An herb.

PETULANCE. [n. f. [petulance, Fr. petulantia, Lat.] Sauciness; petulance; sauciness; wantonness.
 It was excellently said of that philosopher, that there was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth, to restrain the petulance of our words. Ben. Johnson.
 Such was others petulance, that they joyed to see their betters shamefully outraged and abused. King Charles.
 Wife men knew that which looked like pride in some, and like petulance in others, would, by experience in affairs and conversation amongst men, be in time wrought off. Clarendon.
 However their numbers, as well as their insolence and petulance increased, many instances of petulance and scurrility are to be seen in their pamphlets. Swift.
 There appears in our age a pride and petulance in youth, zealous to cast off the sentiments of their fathers and teachers. Watts's Logick.

PETULANT. adj. [petulans, Lat. petulant, Fr.]
 1. Saucy; perverse.
 If the opponent sees victory to incline to his side, let him shew the force of his arguments, without too importunate and petulant demands of an answer. Watts.

2. Wanton.

PHA

2. Wanton.
 The tongue of a man is so petulant, and his thoughts so variable, that one should not lay too great stress upon any present speeches and opinions. Spektor, N° 439.

PETULANTLY. adv. [from petulant.] With petulance; with saucy pertness.

PEW. n. f. [pieuw, Dutch.] A seat inclosed in a church.
 When Sir Thomas More was lord chancellor, he did use, at mass, to sit in the chancel, and his lady in a pew. Bacon.

 Like a phantasma or a hideous dream. Shakespeare.
 This armada is a Spaniard that keeps here in court
 A phantasm, a monarcho, and one that makes sport
 To the prince and his book-mates. Shakespeare.
 They believe, and they believe amiss, because they be but phantasms or apparitions. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 If the great ones were in forwardness, the people were in fury, entertaining this airy body or phantasm with incredible affection; partly out of their great devotion to the house of York, partly out of proud humour. Bacon's Henry VII.

Why,
 In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st
 Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son. Milton.
 Affaying, by his devilish art, to reach
 The organs of her fancy, and with them forge Illusions, as he list, phantasms and dreams. Milton.

PIKE, n. f. [picque, Fr. his snout being sharp. Skinner and Junius.]

1. The lute or pike is the tyrant of the fresh waters: they are bred some by generation, and some not; as namely of a weed called pickerel-weed, unless Gessner be much mistaken; for he says, this weed and other glutinous matter, with the help of the sun's heat in some particular months, and in some ponds apted for it by nature, do become pikes: doubtless divers pikes are bred after this manner, or are brought into some ponds some other ways, that is past man's finding out: Sir Francis Bacon observes the pike to be the longest lived of any fresh water fish, and yet he computes it to be not usually above forty years; and others think it to be not above ten years: he is a solitary, melancholy and bold fish; he breeds but once a year, and his time of breeding or spawning is usually about the end of February, or somewhat later, in March, as the weather proves colder or warmer: and his manner of breeding is thus; a he and a she pike will usually go together out of a river into some ditch or creek, and there the spawner casts her eggs, and the melter hovers over her all the time she is casting her spawn, but touches her not.

In a pond into which were put several fish and two pikes, upon drawing it some years afterwards there were left no fish, but the pikes grown to a prodigious size, having devoured the other fish and their numerous spawn.

2. [Pique, Fr.] A long lance used by the foot soldiers, to keep off the horse, to which bayonets have succeeded.

Beat you the drum that it speak mournfully,
Trail your steel pikes.
Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes;
for I speak this in hunger for bread, not for revenge.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers.
They closed, and locked shoulder to shoulder, their pikes they strained in both hands and therewith their buckler in the left, the one end of the pike against the right foot, the other breast-high against the enemy.

3. A fork used in husbandry.
A rake for to rake up the fitches that lie,
A pike to pike them up handsome to die.

Among turners, two iron sprigs between, which any thing to be turned is fastened.

Hard wood, prepared for the lathe with rasping, they pitch between the pikes.

PIKED, adj. [piqué, Fr.] Sharp; acuminate; ending in a point. In Shakespeare, it is used of a man with a pointed beard.

Why then I fuck my teeth, and catechise
My piked man of countries.

PIKEMAN, n. f. [pique and man.] A soldier armed with a pike.

Three great squadrons of pikemen were placed against the enemy.

PIKESTAFF, n. f. [pique and staff.] The wooden frame of a pike.

To me it is as plain as a pikestaff, from what mixture it is, that this daughter silently lowers, to other steals a kind look.

PILASTER, n. f. [pilastre, Fr. pilastro, Italian.] A square column sometimes insulated, but often set within a wall, and only shewing a fourth or a fifth part of its thickness.

Pilasters must not be too tall and slender, lest they imitate the piles or piers of bridges.

Built like a temple, where pilasters round
Were set.

The curtain rises, and a new frontispiece is seen, joined to the great pilasters each side of the stage.

Clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That laid with bits of rustic makes a front.

PILCHER, n. f. [Warburton says we should read pilche, which signifies a cloak or coat of skins, meaning the scabbard: this is confirmed by Junius, who renders pilly, a garment of skins;
pyleece, Sax. pellice, Fr. pelliccia, Italian; pellis, Lat.]

1. A furred gown or case; any thing lined with fur.

Pluck your sword out of his pilcher by the ears.

PILE, n. f. [pila, Fr. pyle, Dutch.]

1. A strong piece of wood driven into the ground to make firm a foundation.

The bridge the Turks before broke, by plucking up of certain piles, and taking away of the planks.

If the ground be hollow or weak, he strengthens it by driving in piles.

The foundation of the church of Harlem is supported by wooden piles, as the houses in Amsterdam are.

2. A heap; an accumulation.

That is the way to lay the city flat,
And bury all which yet distinctly ranges
In heaps and piles of ruin.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated

PIL

To his own portion! what expence by th' hour
Seems to flow from him! how i' th' name of thrift,
Does he rake this together.

By the water passing through the stone to its perpendicular intervals, was brought thither all the metallic matter now lodged therein, as well as that which lies only in an undig-ested and confused pile.

3. Any thing heaped together to be burned.

I'll bear your logs the while; pray give me it,
I'll carry't to the pile.

Woe to the bloody city, I will even make the pile for fire great.

In Alexander's time, the Indian philosophers, when weary of living, lay down upon their funeral pile without any visible concern.

The wife, and counsellor or priest,
Prepare and light his funeral fire,
And cheerful on the pile expire.

4. An edifice; a building.

Th' ascending pile stood fix'd her stately height,
Not to look back so far, to whom this life

Owes the first glory of so brave a pile.

The pile o'erlook'd the town, and drew the fight.

Fancy brings the vanish'd piles to view,
And builds imaginary Rome anew.

No longer shall forsaken Thames Lament his old Whitehall in flames;
A pile shall from its ashes rise,
Fit to invade or prop the skies.

5. A hair. [pilus, Lat.]

Yonder's my lord, with a patch of velvet on's face; his left cheek is a cheek of two piles and a half, but his right cheek is worn bare.

Hairy surface; nap.

Many other sorts of stones are regularly figured; the amianthus of parallel threads, as in the pile of velvet.

7. [Pilum, Lat.] The head of an arrow.

His spear a bent,
The pile was of a horse fly's tongue,
Whole sharpness nought revers'd.

8. [Pila, Fr. pila, Italian.] One side of a coin; the reverse of cross.

Other men have been, and are of the same opinion, a man may more justifiably throw up cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up so.

9. [In the plural, piles.] The hemorrhoids.

Wherever there is any uneasiness, solicit the humours towards that part, to procure the piles, which seldom miss to relieve the head.

To PILE, v. a.

1. To heap; to coacervate.

The fabric of his folly, whose foundation
Is piled upon his faith, and will continue

The standing of his body.

Let them pull all about my ears,
Pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might downstretch
Below the beam of sight, yet will I still Be thus.

Against beleagu'd heav'n the giants move;
Hills piled on hills, on mountains mountains lie,
To make their mad approaches to the sky.

Men piled on men, with active leaps arise,
And build the breathing fabric to the skies.

In all that heap of quotations which he has piled up, nothing is aimed at.

All these together are the foundation of all those heaps of comments, which are piled so high upon authors, that it is difficult sometimes to clear the text from the rubbish.

2. To fill with something heaped.

Attabaliba had a great house piled upon the sides with great wedges of gold.

PILEATED, adj. [pileus, Lat.] In the form of a cover or hat.

To PILFER, v. a. [pilfer, Fr.] To steal; to gain by petty robbery.

They not only steal from each other, but pilfer away all things that they can from such strangers as do land.

He would not pilfer the victory; and the defeat was easy.

Leaders, at an army's head,
Hem'd round with glories, pilfer cloth or bread,
As meanly plunder, as they bravely fought.

To PILFER, v. n. To practise petty theft.

Your purpos'd low correction
Is such as basest and the meanest wretches,
For pilf'ring and most common trespasses,
Are punish'd with.

They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

PIL

I came not here on such a trivial toy,
As a stray'd ewe, or to pursue the stealth
Of pilfering wolf.

When these plagiarists come to be stript of their pilfered ornaments, there's the daw of the fable.

Ev'ry thing is told,
For fear some pilf'ring hand should make too bold.

PILFERER, n. f. [pilfer.] One who steals petty things.

Haft thou suffered at any time by vagabonds and pilferers?

peregrinus, Lat.] A traveller; a wanderer; particularly one who travels on a religious account.

Two pilgrims, which have wandered some miles together, have a hearty-grief when they are near to part.

Granting they could not tell Abraham's footstep from an ordinary pilgrim's; yet they should know some difference between the foot of a man and the face of Venus.

Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end.

To PILGRIM, v. n. [pilgrim.] To wander; to ramble.

The ambulo hath no certain home or diet, but pilgrims up and down every where, feeding upon all sorts of plants.

PILGRIMAGE, n. f. [pilgrimage, Fr.]

1. A long journey; travel; more usually a journey on account of devotion.

We are like two men
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage.

In prison thou hast spent a pilgrimage,
And, like a hermit, overpast thy days.

Most miserable hour, that time ere saw
In lasting labour of his pilgrimage.

Painting is a long pilgrimage; if we do not actually begin the journey, and travel at a round rate, we shall never arrive at the end of it.

2. Shakespeare used it for time irksomely spent, improperly.

PILL, n. f. [pilula, Lat. pillule, French.] Medicine made into a small ball or mass.

Certain hard words made into pills.

To PILL, v. a. [piller, Fr.]

1. To rob; to plunder.

So did he good to none, to many ill;
So did he all the kingdom rob and pill.

The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,
And lost their hearts.

Large-handed robbers your grave masters are,
And pill by law.

You wrangling pirates, that fall out
In flaring that which you have pill'd from me.

Suppose pilling and polling officers, as busy upon the people, as those flies were upon the fox.

He who pill'd his province 'scapes the laws,
And keeps his money, though he lost his cause.

2. For peel; to strip off the bark.

Jacob took him rods of green poplar, and pilled white streaks in them.

To PILL, v. n. To be stript away; to come off in flakes or scories. This should be peel; which see.

are very near a-kin.

To PILLORY, v. a. [pillorier, Fr. from the noun.] To punish with the pillory.

To be burnt in the hand or pillored, is a more lasting reproach than to be scourged or confin'd.

PILLOW, n. f. [pylle, Saxon; pukewe, Dutch.] A bag of down or feathers laid under the head to sleep on.

Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads.

One turf shall serve as pillow for us both,
One heart, one bed, two bosoms, and one troth.

A merchant died that was very far in debt, his goods and household stuff were set forth to sale; a stranger would needs buy a pillow there, saying, this pillow sure is good to sleep on, since he could sleep on it that owed so many debts.

Thy melted maid,
Corrupted by thy lover's gold,
His letter at thy pillow laid.

Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging.

To PILLOW, v. a. To rest any thing on a pillow.

When the sun in bed,

on, as pilosity, more roughness in the skin.

PILLOT, n. f. [pilote, Fr. piloot, Dutch.] He whose office is to steer the ship.

When her keel ploughs hell,
And deck knocks heaven; then to manage her,
Becomes the name and office of a pilot.

To death I with such joy resort,
As seamen from a tempest to their port;

Yet to that port ourselves we must not force,
Before our pilot, nature, steers our course.

What port can such a pilot find,
Who in the night of fate must blindly steer?

The Roman fleet, although built by shipwrights, and conducted by pilots without experience, defeated that of the Carthaginians.

To PILLOT, v. a. [pilot.] To steer; to direct in the course.

PILOTAGE, n. f. [pilotage, French, from pilot.]

knowledge and pilotage of that part of the world.

2. A pilot's hire.

PILSER, n. f. The moth or fly that runs into a candle flame.

PIMENTA, n. f. [piment, French.] A kind of spice.

Pimenta, from its round figure, and the place whence it is brought, has been called Jamaica pepper, and from its mixt flavour of the several aromatics, it has obtained the name of all-spice: it is a fruit gathered before it is ripe, and dried for medicinal and culinary use, of the size of a small pea, with a brown and rough surface, and it resembles that of cloves more than any other single spice.

P I N

PIMP. n. f. [pings, Fr. Skinner.] One who provides gratifications for the lust of others; a procurer; a pander.
I'm courted by all
As principal pimp to the mighty king Harry. Addison Lords keep a pimp to bring a wench;
So men of wit are but a kind Of panders to a vicious mind;
Who proper objects must provide
To gratify their lust of pride. Swift
To PIMP. v. a. [from the noun.] To provide gratifications for the lust of others; to pander; to procure.
But he's posselt with a thousand imps,
To work whose ends his madnels pimps. Swift
Yet bards like these aspir'd to lasting praise,
And proudly hop'd to pimp in future days. Anonymous
PIMPERNEL. n. f. [pimpernella, Latin; pimprenelle, French.] A plant.
The flower of the pimpernel consists of one leaf shaped like a wheel and cut into several segments; the pointal, which rises out of the empalement, is fixed like a nail in the middle of the flower, and afterwards becomes a roundish fruit, which, when ripe, opens transversely into two parts, one incumbent on the other, inclosing many angular seeds, which adhere to the placenta. Miller
PIMPING. adj. [pimple mensch, a weak man, Dutch.] Little; petty: as, a pimping thing. Skinner
PIMPLE. n. f. [pompette, Fr.] A small red pustule.

If e'er thy gnome could spoil a grace,
Or raise a pimple on a beauteous face. Pope
PIMPLED. adj. [from pimple.] Having red pustules; full of pimples: as, his face is pimpled.
PIN. n. f. [espingle, Fr. spina, spinula, Lat. spilla, Italian; rather from pennum, low Latin. Isidore.] 1. A short wire with a sharp point and round head, used by women to fasten their cloaths.
I'll make thee eat iron like an ostridge, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakespeare
Whatever spirit, careless of his charge,
His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
Shall feel sharp vengeance soon o'ertake his sins,
Be stop'd in vials, or transfixt with pins. Pope
2. Any thing inconsiderable or of little value.
Soon after comes the cruel Saracen,
In woven mail all armed warily,
And sternly looks at him, who not a pin
Does care for look of living creature's eye. Fairy Queen
His fetch is to flatter to get what he can;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee than.
Tut, a pin; this shall be answer'd. Shakespeare
'Tis foolish to appeal to witness for proof, when 'tis not a pin matter whether the fact be true or false. L'Estrange
3. Any thing driven to hold parts together; a peg; a bolt.
With pins of adamant
And chains, they made all fast. Milton's Par. Lost

3. Oppression; distress inflicted.
Return to her: no, rather I chuse
To be a comrad with the wolf and owl, Necessity's sharp pinch. Shakespeare, King Lear
A farmer was put to such a pinch in a hard winter, that he was forced to feed his family upon the main stock. L'Estr.
4. Difficulty; time of distress.
A good sure friend is a better help at a pinch, than all the stratagems of a man's own wit. Bacon
The devil helps his servants for a season; but when they come once to a pinch, he leaves 'em in the lurch. L'Estrange
The commentators never fail him at a pinch, and must excuse him. Dryden
They at a pinch can bribe a vote. Swift's Miscellanies PINCHEST. n. f. [pinch, figh, and penny.] A miser. Ans.
PINCHPENNY. n. f. [pin and penny.] A small bag stuffed with bran or wool on which pins are stuck.
She would ruin me in silks, were not the quantity, that goes to a large pincushion, sufficient to make her a gown and petticoat. Addison's Guardian, N° 271.
Thou art a retailer of phrases, and dost deal in remnants of remnants, like a maker of pincushions. Congreve
PINDUST. n. f. [pin and dust.] Small particles of metal made by cutting pins.
The little parts of pindust, when mingled with sand, cannot, by their mingling, make it lighter. Digby
PINE. n. f. [pinus, Lat. pin, French.] The pine-tree hath amentaceous flowers or katkins, which are produced, at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the seeds are produced in squamous cones: to which should be added, that the leaves are longer than those of a fir-tree, and are produced by pairs out of each sheath. Miller
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven. Shakespeare
Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her younger days. Shakespeare Go forth unto the mount, and fetch pine-branches. Nehem.
To PINE. v. a. [pinan, Sax. pinen, Dutch.] 1. To languish; to wear away with any kind of misery.
My hungry eyes through greedy covetise,
With no contentment can themselves suffice;
But having, pine, and having not, complain. Spenser
I burn, I pine, I perish,
If I achieve not this young modest girl. Shakespeare
Since my young lady's going into France, the fool hath much pin'd away. Shakespeare, King Lear
See, see the pinning malady of France,
Behold the most unnatural wounds,
Which thou thyself hast giv'n her woful breast. Shakespeare
Ye shall not mourn, but pine away for your iniquities. Ezekiel xxiv. 23.
The wicked with anxiety of mind
Shall pine away; in sighs consume their breath. Sandys
To me who with eternal famine pine, Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost
Farewell the year, which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show;
Welcome the new, whose ev'ry day,
Restoring what was snatch'd away
By pinning sickness from the fair,
That matchless beauty does repair. Waller
This night shall see the gaudy wreath decline,
The roses wither, and the lilies pine. Tickell
2. To languish with desire.
We may again
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives,
Do faithful homage and receive free honours;
All which we pine for. Shakespeare, Macbeth
We flood amaz'd to see your mistress mourn, Unknowing that the pin'd for your return. Dryden
Your new commander need not pine for action. Philips
To PINE. v. a. 1. To wear out; to make to languish.
Part us; I towards the north,
Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime. Shakespeare
Beroe pin'd with pain,
Her age and anguish from these rites detain.
Thus tender Spencer liv'd, with mean repast
Content, depress'd with penury, and pin'd
In foreign realm: yet not debas'd his verse. Philips
2. To grieve for; to bemoan in silence.
Abasht the devil stood,
Virtue in her shape how lovely, faw; and pin'd
His loss. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.
The pineapple hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided into three parts, and is funnel-shaped: the embryos are produced in the tubercles: these become a fleshy fruit full of

P I N

juice: the seeds, which are lodged in the tubercles, are very small and almost kidney-shaped. Miller
Try if any words can give the taste of a pineapple, and make one have the true idea of its relish. Locke
If a child were kept where he never saw but black and white, he would have no more ideas of scarlet, than he that never tasted a pineapple, has of that particular relish. Locke
PINEAL. adj. [pineale, Fr.] Resembling a pineapple. An epithet given by Des Cartes from the form, to the gland which he imagined the seat of the soul.
Courtiers and spaniels exactly resemble one another in the pineal gland. Arbutnot and Pope
PINFATHERED. adj. [pin and feather.] Not fledged; having the feathers yet only beginning to shoot.
We see some raw pinfeather'd thing
Attempt to mount, and fights and heroes sing;
Who for false quantities was whipt at school. Dryden
PINFOLD. n. f. [pinban, Sax. to shut up, and fold.] A place in which beafts are confined.
The Irish never come to those raths but armed; which the English nothing suspecting, are taken at an advantage, like sheep in the pinfold. Spenser on Ireland
I care not for thee.—
—If I had thee in Lipsbury pinfold, I would make thee care for me. Shakespeare, King Lear Confin'd and pester'd in this pinfold here,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being.
Oaths were not purpos'd more than law
To keep the good and just in awe,
But to confine the bad and sinful,
Like moral cattle in a pinfold. Hudibras
PINGLE. n. f. A small clofe; an inclosure. Ans.
PINMONEY. n. f. [pin and money.] Money allowed to a wife for her private expences without account.
The woman must find out something else to mortgage, when her pinmoney is gone. Addison's Guardian
PINGUID. adj. [pinguis, Lat.] Fat; unctuous. Little used.
Some clays are more pinguid, and other more slippery; yet all of them are very tenacious of water on the surface. Mortimer's Husbandry
PINHOLE. n. f. [pin and hole.] A small hole, such as is made by the perforation of a pin.
The breast at first broke in a small pinhole. Wijeman
PINION. n. f. [pinion, Fr.] 1. The joint of the wing remotest from the body.
2. Shakespeare seems to use it for a feather or quill of the wing.
He is pluckt, when hither
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing. Shakespeare
3. Wing.
How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The flitting skies, like flying pursuivant.
The God, who mounts the winged winds,
Fast to his feet the golden pinions binds,
That high through fields of air his flight sustain.
Though fear should lend him pinions like the wind,
Yet swifter fate will seize him from behind. Pope
4. The tooth of a smaller wheel, answering to that of a larger.
5. Fetters for the hands. Ans.
To PINION. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To bind the wings.
Whereas they have sacrificed to themselves, they become themselves sacrifices to the inconstancy of fortune, whose wings they thought by their self-willdom to have pinioned. Bacon's Essays, N° 24.
2. To confine by binding the wings.
3. To bind the arm to the body.
A second spear sent with equal force,
His right arm pierc'd, and holding on, bereft
His use of both, and pinion'd down his left. Dryden
4. To confine by binding the elbows to the sides.
Swarming at his back the country cry'd,
And seiz'd and pinion'd brought to court the knight. Dryden
5. To shackle; to bind.
Know, that I will not wait pinion'd at your master's court;
rather make my country's high pyramids my gibbet, and hang me up in chains. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra
You are not to go loose any longer, you must be pinion'd. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor
O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!
That my free soul may use her wings,
Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
As an entangled, hamper'd thing.
In vain from chains and fetters free,
The great man boasts of liberty;
He's pinion'd up by formal rules of state. Norris
6. To bind to.
A heavy lord shall hang at ev'ry wit;
And while on fame's triumphant car they ride,
Some slave of mine be pinion'd to their side. Dunciad
PINK.

P I O

PINK. n. f. [pince, Fr. from pink, Dutch, an eye; whence the French word aillet.]
 1. A small fragrant flower of the gilliflower kind.
 In May and June come pinks of all sorts; especially the bluish pink. Bacon's Essays.
 2. An eye; commonly a small eye: as, pink-eyed.
 Come, thou monarch of the vine,
 Plump Bacchus, with pink eye,
 In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakespeare.

 The gilded pinnacles of fate. Cowley.
PINNER. n. f. [from pinna or pinion.]
 1. The lappet of a head which flies loose.
 Her goodly countenance I've seen,
 Set off with kerchief starch'd, and pinnars clean. Gay.
 An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner or a night-rail, but will talk on the vitta. Addison on Ancient Medals.
 2. A pinnaker.
PINNOCK. n. f. The tom-tit.
PINT. n. f. [pinz, Sax. pinte, Fr. pinta, low Lat.] Half a quart; in medicine, twelve ounces; a liquid measure.
 Well, you'll not believe me generous, till I crack half a pint with you at my own charges. Dryden.
PINULES. n. f. In astronomy, the sights of an astrolabe. Dict.
PIONEER. n. f. [pionier, from pion, obsolete Fr. pion, according to Scaliger, comes from pes for pedito, a foot soldier, who was formerly employed in digging for the army. A pioneer is in Dutch, spuigener, from spage, a spade; whence pioneer is that the French borrowed pagenier, which was afterwards called pioneer.] One whose business is to level the road, throw up works, or sink mines in military operations.
 Well said, old mole, can't work i' th' ground so fast?
 A worthy pioneer? Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Three try new experiments, such as themselves think good; these we call pioneers or miners. Bacon.
 His pioneers
 Even the paths, and make the highways plain. Fairfax.

P I P

Of labouring pioneers
 A multitude with spades and axes arm'd,
 To lay hills plain, fell woods or vallies fill. Milton.

PIONING. n. f. Works of pioneers.
PIONY. n. f. [pæonia, Lat.] A large flower. See PEONY.
PIOUS. adj. [pious, Lat. pieux, Fr.]
 1. Careful of the duties owed by created beings to God; godly; religious; such as is due to sacred things.
 Pious awe that fear'd to have offended. Milton.
 2. Careful of the duties of near relation.
 As he is not called a just father, that educates his children well, but pious; so that prince, who defends and well rules his people, is religious. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 Where was the martial brother's pious care?
 Condemn'd perhaps some foreign shore to tread. Pope.
 3. Practised under the appearance of religion.
 I shall never gratify spitefulness with any sinister thoughts of all whom pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.
PIOUSLY. adv. [from pious.] In a pious manner; religiously; with regard; such as is due to sacred things.
 The prime act and evidence of the christian hope is, to set industriously and piously to the performance of that condition, on which the promise is made. Hammond.
 See lion-hearted Richard, with his force
 Drawn from the North, to Jory's hallow'd plains;
 Piously valiant. Phillips.
 This martial present piously design'd,
 The loyal city give their best-lov'd king. Dryden.
 Let freedom never perish in your hands!
 But piously transmit it to your children. Addison's Cato.
PIP. n. f. [pippe, Dutch; pepie, Fr. deduced by Skinner from pituita; but probably coming from pipio or pipilo, on account of the complaining cry.]
 1. A defluxion with which fowls are troubled; a horny pellicle that grows on the tip of their tongues.
 When murrain reigns in hogs or sheep,
 And chickens languish of the pip. Hudibras.
 A spiteful vexatious giply died of the pip. L'Estrange.
 2. A spot on the cards. I know not from what original, unless from piet, painting; in the country, the pictured or court cards are called piets.
 When our women fill their imaginations with pips and counters, I cannot wonder at a new-born child, that was marked with the five of clubs. Addison's Guardian.
TO PIP. v. a. [pipio, Lat.] To chirp or cry as a bird.
 It is no unrequited thing to hear the chick pip and cry in the egg, before the shell be broken. Boyle.
PIPE. n. f. [pip, Welsh; pipe, Saxon.]
 1. Any long hollow body; a tube.
 The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
 We powt upon the mornings, are unapt
 To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd
 These pipes, and these conveyances of blood
 With wine and feedings, we have suppler souls. Shakespeare.
 The part of the pipe, which was lowermost, will become higher; so that water ascends by descending. Wilkins.
 It has many springs breaking out of the sides of the hills, and vast quantities of wood to make pipes of. Addison.
 An animal, the nearer it is to its original, the more pipes it hath, and as it advanceth in age, still fewer. Arbutnot.
 2. A tube of clay through which the fume of tobacco is drawn into the mouth.
 Try the taking of fumes by pipes, as in tobacco and other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon's Natural History.
 His ancient pipe in fable dy'd,
 And half unmoak'd lay by his side. Swift.
 My husband's a sot,
 With his pipe and his pot. Swift.
 3. An instrument of hand music.
 I have known, when there was no music with him but the drum and the fife, and now had he rather hear the taber and the pipe. Shakespeare.
 The solemn pipe and dulcimer.
 The shrill found of a small rural pipe,
 Was entertainment for the infant stage.
 There is no reason, why the found of a pipe should leave traces in their brains. Recommen.
 4. The organs of voice and respiration; as, the wind-pipe.
 The exercise of singing openeth the breast and pipes. Pont.
 5. The key of the voice.
 My throat of war be turn'd,
 Which quired with my drum, into a pipe. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
 Small as an eunuch.
 6. An office of the exchequer.
 That office of her majesty's exchequer, we, by a metaphor, call the pipe, because the whole receipt is finally conveyed into it by the means of divers small pipes or quills, as water into a cistern. Bacon.
 7. [Pip]

P I Q

7. [Peep, Dutch; pipe, Fr.] A liquid measure containing two hogheads.
 I think I shall drink in pipe wine with Falstaff; I'll make him dance. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
TO PIPE. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To play on the pipe.
 Merry Michael the Cornish poet pip'd thus upon his oaten pipe for merry England. Camden's Remains.
 We have pip'd unto you, and you have not danced. Mat. Dryden.
 In fingering, as in piping, you excel.
 Gaming goats, and fleecy flocks,
 And lowing herds, and piping swains,
 Come dancing to me. Swift.
 2. To have a shrill found.
 His big manly voice,
 Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
 And whistles in his found. Shakespeare. As You like it.
PIPER. n. f. [from pipe.] One who plays on the pipe.
 Pipers and trumpeters shall be heard no more in thee. Rev.
PIPETREE. n. f. The lilac tree.
PIPING. adj. [from pipe.] This word is only used in low language.
 1. Weak; feeble; sickly: from the weak voice of the sick.
 I, in this weak piping time of peace,
 Have no delight to pass away the time,
 Unless to spy my shadow in the fun. Shakespeare.
 2. Hot; boiling: from the found of any thing that boils.
PIPKIN. n. f. [diminutive of pipe, a large vessel.] A small earthen boiler.
 A pipkin there like Homer's tripod walks:
 Some officer might give content
 To a large cover'd pipkin in his tent. King.
PIPPIN. n. f. [puppingles, Dutch. Skinner.] A sharp apple.
 Pippins take their name from the small spots or pips that usually appear on the sides of them: some are called stone pippins from their obdurateness; some Kentish pippins, because they agree well with that soil; others French pippins, having their original from France, which is the best bearer of any of these pippins; the Holland pippin and the russet pippin, from its russet hue; but such as are distinguished by the names of grey and white pippins are of equal goodness: they are generally a very pleasant fruit and of good juice, but slender bearers. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 You shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting. Shakespeare.
 At supper entertain yourself with a pippin roasted. Harvey.
 The story of the pippin-woman, I look upon as fabulous. Addison's Spectator, N° 247.
 His foaming tusks let some large pippin grace,
 Or midst those thund'ring spears an orange place. King.
 This pippin shall another trial make;
 See from the core two kernels brown I take. Gay.
PIQUANT. adj. [piquant, French.]
 1. Pricking; piercing; stimulating.
 There are vast mountains of a transparent rock extremely solid, and as piquant to the tongue as salt. Addison on Italy.
 2. Sharp; tart; pungent; severe.
 Some think their wits asleep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant, and to the quick: that is a vein that would be bridled; and men ought to find the difference between faltness and bitterness. Bacon's Essays.
 Men make their raieries as piquant as they can to wound the deeper. Government of the Tongue.
PIQUANCY. n. f. [from piquant.] Sharpness; tartness.
PIQUANTLY. adv. [from piquant.] Sharply; tartly.

What pity 'tis you are not all divine.
Who would not be that youth? what pity is it
That we can die but once to serve our country? Addis.
3. It has in this sense a plural. In low language.
Singleness of heart being a virtue so necessary, 'tis a thousand pities it should be discountenanced. L'Estrange.
To PRIVY. v. a. [pitoyer, Fr.] To compassionate; to pity;
to regard with tenderness on account of unhappiness.
When I desired their leave, that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house. Shakesp.
He made them to be pitied of all. Psalms cv. 46.
You I could pity thus forlorn.
Compassionate my pains! the pities me!
To one that asks the warm return of love,
Compassion's cruelty, 'tis scorn, 'tis death. Addison.
To PRIVY. v. n. To be compassionate.
I will not pity nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them. Jeremiah xiii. 14.
PIVOT. n. f. [pivot, Fr.] A pin on which any thing turns.
When a man dances on the rope, the body is a weight balanced on its feet, as upon two pivots. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
PIX. n. f. [pix, Lat.] A little chest or box, in which the consecrated host is kept in Roman catholic countries. Hammer.

The pizzle in animals is official to urine and generation.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
PLACABLE. adj. [placabilis, Lat.] Willing or possible to be appeased.
Since I fought
By pray'r th' offended deity I appease;
Methought I saw him placable and mild,
Bending his ear. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
Those implanted anticipations are, that there is a god, that he is placable, to be feared, honoured, loved, worshipped and obeyed. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
PLACABILITY. n. f. [from placable.] Willingness to be appeased; possibility to be appeased.
PLACABLENESS. s. appeared; possibility to be appeased.
The various methods of propitiation and atonement shew the general consent of all nations in their opinion of the mercy and placability of the divine nature. Anonymous.
PLACARD. n. f. [plakart, Dutch; placard, Fr.] An edict;
PLACART. s. a declaration; a manifesto.
To PLACATE. v. a. [placare, Lat.] To appease; to reconcile.
This word is used in Scotland.
That the effect of an atonement and reconciliation was to give all mankind a right to approach and rely on the protection and beneficence of a placated deity, is not deducible from nature. Forbes.
PLACE.

PLA

- PLACE. n. f. [place, Fr. piazza, Italian; from platen, Lat.]
1. Particular portion of space.
Search you out a place to pitch your tents. Deut. i. 33.
We accept it always and in all places. Acts xxiv. 3.
Here I could frequent
With worship, place by place, where he vouchsaf'd Presence divine. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
I will teach him the names of the most celebrated persons;
who frequent that place. Addison's Guardian, N° 107.
2. Locality; ubiquity; local relation.
Place is the relation of distance betwixt any thing, and any two or more points considered as keeping the same distance one with another; and so as at rest: it has sometimes a more confused sense, and stands for that space which any body takes up. Locke.
3. Local existence.
The earth and the heaven fled away, and there was found no place for them. Revelations xx. 11.
4. Space in general.
All bodies are confin'd within some place;
But the all place within herself confines. Davies.
5. Separate room.
In his brain
He hath strange places cram'd with observation. Shakesp.
6. A seat; residence; mansion.
The Romans shall take away both our place and nation. Jo.
Saul set him up a place, and is gone down to Gilgal. 1 Sam.
7. Passage in writing.
Holca faith of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me;
which place proveth, that there are governments which God doth not avow. Bacon's Holy War.
I could not pass by this place, without giving this short explanation. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
8. Ordinal relation.
What scripture doth plainly deliver, to that the first place
both of credit and obedience is due. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
Let the eye be satisfied in the first place, even against all other reasons, and let the compass be rather in your eyes than in your hands. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
We shall extinguish this melancholy thought, of our being overlooked by our maker, if we consider, in the first place, that he is omnipresent; and, in the second, that he is omniscient. Spektor, N° 565.
9. Existence; state of being; validity; state of actual operation.
I know him a notorious liar;
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these fix'd evils fit to fit in him,
That they take place, when virtue's steely bones
Look bleak in the cold wind. Shakesp.
These fair overtures, made by men well esteem'd for honest dealing, could take no place. Hayward.
They are defects, not in the heart, but in the brain; for they take place in the stoutest natures. Bacon.
With faults confest'd commission'd her to go,
If pity yet had place, and reconcile her foe. Dryden.
Where arms take place, all other pleasures are vain;
Love taught me force, and force shall love maintain. Dryden.
To the joy of mankind, the unhappy omen took not place. Dryden's Dedication to his Fables.
Somewhat may be invented, perhaps more excellent than the first design; though Virgil must be still excepted, when that perhaps takes no place. Dryden's Preface to Ovid.
Mixt government, partaking of the known forms received in the schools, is by no means of Gothick invention, but hath place in nature and reason. Swift.
It is stupidly foolish to venture our salvation upon an experiment, which we have all the reason imaginable to think God will not suffer to take place. Atterbury's Sermons.
10. Rank; order of priority.
The heavens themselves, the planets, and this center
Observe degree, priority and place. Shakesp.
11. Precedence; priority. This sense is commonly used in the phrase take place.
Do you think I'd walk in any plot,
Where Madam Sempronius should take place of me,
And Fulvia come i' the rear. Benj. Jonson's Catiline.
There would be left no measures of credible and incredible, if doubtful propositions take place before self-evident. Locke.
As a British freeholder, I should not scruple taking place of a French marquis. Addison's Freeholder.
12. Office; public character or employment.
Do you your office, or give up your place,
And you shall well be spared. Shakesp.
If I'm traduc'd by tongues that neither know
My faculties nor person;
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
The horsemen came to Lodronius, as unto the most valiant captain, beseeching him, instead of their treacherous general, to take upon him the place. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

13. Room; way; space for appearing or acting given by cession; not opposition.
Avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath. Romans xii. 19.
He took a stride, and to his fellows cry'd,
Give place, and mark the difference if you can, Dryden.
Between a woman warrior and a man.
Victorious York did first, with fam'd success,
To his known valour, make the Dutch give place. Dryd.
The ruffick honours of the scythe and share,
Give place to swords and plumes the pride of war. Dryd.
14. Ground; room.
Ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in

There is no place of doubting, but that it was the very same. Hammond's Fundamentals.
To PLACE. v. a. [placer, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To put in any place, rank or condition.
Place such over them to be rulers. Ex. xviii. 21.
He placed forces in all the fenced cities. 2 Chron. xvii. 2.
Those accusations had been more reasonable, if placed on inferior persons. Dryden's Aeneas.
2. To fix; to settle; to establish.
God or nature has not any where placed any such jurisdiction in the first born. Locke.
3. To put out at interest.
'Twas his care
To place on good security his gold. Pope.
PLACER. n. f. [from place.] One that places.
Sovereign lord of creatures all,
Thou placer of plants, both humble and tall. Spenser.
PLACID. adj. [placidus, Latin.]
1. Gentle; quiet; not turbulent.
It conduceth unto long life and to the more placid motion of the spirits, that men's actions be free. Bacon.
2. Soft; kind; mild.
That placid aspect and meek regard,
Rather than aggravate my evil state,
Would stand between me and thy father's ire. Milton.
PLACIDLY. adv. [from placid.] Mildly; gently.
If into a phial, filled with good spirit of nitre, you cast a piece of iron, the liquor, whose parts moved uniformly and placidly before, by altering its motion, it begins to penetrate and scatter abroad particles of the iron. Boyle.
The water easily insinuates itself into, and placidly diffends the tubes and vessels of vegetables. Woodward.
PLACIT. n. f. [placitum, Lat.] Decree; determination.
We spend time in defence of their placits, which might have been employ'd upon the universal author. Glanvill.
PLACKET. or plaguet. n. f. A petticoat.
You might have pinch'd a plaguet, it was senseless. Shak.
The bone-ach is the curse dependant on those that war for a plaguet. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
PLAGIARISM. n. f. [from plagiary.] Theft; literary adoption of the thoughts or works of another.
With great impropriety, as well as plagiarism, they have most injuriously been transferred into proverbial maxims. Swi.
PLAGIARY. n. f. [from plagium, Lat.]
1. A thief in literature; one who steals the thoughts or writings of another.
The ensuing discourse, left I chance to be traduced for a plagiary by him who has played the thief, was one of those that, by a worthy hand, were stolen from me. South.
Without invention, a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiary of others; both are allowed sometimes to copy and translate. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. The crime of literary theft. Not used.
Plagiarism had not its nativity with printing, but began when the paucity of books scarce wanted that invention. Brown.
PLAGUE. n. f. [plaghe, Dutch; plage, Teut. plaga, Latin;
πληγή.]
1. Pestilence; a disease eminently contagious and destructive.
Thou art a bile,
A plague-fore or imbois'd carbuncle
In my corrupted blood. Shakesp. King Lear.
The general opinion is, that years hot and moist are most pestilential; yet many times there have been great plagues in dry years. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Snakes, that use within thy house for shade,
Securely lurk, and, like a plague, invade Thy cattle with venom. May's Virgil's Georgicks.

- All those plagues, which earth and air had brooded,
First on inferior creatures try'd their force,
And last they seiz'd on man. Lee and Dryden.
2. State of misery.
I am fet in my plague, and my heaviness is ever in my light. Psalms xxxviii. 17.
3. Any thing troublesome or vexatious.
'Tis the time's plague, when madmen lead the blind. Sha.
I am not mad, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity. Shakespeare. K. John.
Good or bad company is the greatest blessing or greatest plague of life. L'Estrange.
- Sometimes my plague, sometimes my darling. Prior.
- TO PLAGUE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To infect with pestilence.
2. To trouble; to tease; to vex; to harass; to torment; to afflict; to distress; to torture; to embarrass; to excruciate;
to make uneasy; to disturb.
If her nature be so,
That she will plague the man that loves her most,
And take delight to encrease a wretch's woe,
Then all her nature's goodly gifts are lost. Spenser.
Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
Thou art not honest, and the gods will plague thee. Shak.
Thus were they plagu'd
And worn with famine. Milton.
People are formed out of their reason, plagu'd into a compliance, and forced to yield in their own defence. Collier.
When a Neapolitan cavalier has nothing else to do, he gravely shuts himself up in his closet, and falls a tumbling over his papers, to see if he can start a law suit, and plague any of his neighbours. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- PLA GUILY. adv. [from plaguy.] Vexatiously; horribly. A low word.
This whispering bodes me no good; but he has me so plaguily under the lash, I dare not interrupt him. Dryden.
You look'd scornful, and snift at the dean;
But he durst not so much as once open his lips,
And the doctor was plaguily down in the hips. Swift.
- PLA GUY. adj. [from plague.] Vexatious; troublesome. A low word.
Of heats,
Add one more to the plaguy bill. Domie.
What perils do environ
The man that meddles with cold iron,
What plaguy mischiefs and mishaps
Do dog him still with after-claps. Hudibras.
- PLAICE. n. f. [plate, Dutch.] A flat fish.
Of flat fish there are soles, flounders, dabs and plaice. Carew.
- PLAID. n. f. A striped or variegated cloth; an outer loose weed worn much by the highlanders in Scotland; there is a particular kind worn too by the women; but both these modes seem now nearly extirpated among them; the one by act of parliament; and the other by adopting the English dresses of the sex.
- PLAIN. adj. [planus, Latin.]
1. Smooth; level; flat; free from protuberances or excres-cences. In this sense, especially in philosophical writings, it is frequently written plane: as, a plane superficies.
It was his policy to leave no hold behind him; but to make all plain and waste. Spenser.
The South and South-East sides are rocky and mountainous, but plain in the midst. Sandys's Journey.
Thy vineyard must employ thy sturdy steer
To turn the glebe; besides thy daily pain
To break the clods, and make the surface plain. Dryden.
Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would chafe to travel through a plain one. Add.
2. Void of ornament; simple.
A crown of ruddy gold inclos'd her brow,
Plain without pomp, and rich without a show. Dryden.
3. Artless; not subtle; not specious; not learned; simple.
In choice of instruments, it is better to chuse men of a plain sort, that are like to do that that is committed to them, and to report faithfully the success, than those that are cunning to contrive somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report. Bacon's Essays.
Of many plain, yet pious christians, this cannot be affirmed. Hammow's Fundamentals.
The experiments alledged with so much confidence, and told by an author that writ like a plain man, and one whose profession was to tell truth, helped me to resolve upon making

'Tis plain in the history, that Esau was never subject to Jacob. Locke.
That children have such a right, is plain from the laws of God; that men are convinced, that children have such a right, is evident from the law of the land. Locke.
It is plain, that these discourses are calculated for none, but the fashionable part of womankind. Addison's Spectator.
To speak one thing mix'd dialects they join;
Divide the simple, and the plain define. Prior.
7. Not varied by much art.
A plain song plain-singing voice requires,

Mar. vii. 35.
3. Simply; with rough sincerity.
Goodman Fact is allowed by every body to be a plain- spoken person, and a man of very few words; tropes and figures are his aversion. Addison's Court Tatler.
- PLAIN. n. f. [plaine, Fr.] Level ground; open; flat; often, a field of battle.
In a plain in the land of Shinar they dwelt. Gen. xi. 2.
The Scots took the English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsook their hill, and march'd into the plain directly towards them. Hayward.
They erected their castles and habitations in the plains and open countries, where they found most fruitful lands, and turned the Irish into the woods and mountains. Davies.
Four forth Britannia's legions on the plain. Arbutnot.
While here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope.
The impetuous courier pants in ev'ry vein,
And pining seems to beat the distant plain. Pope.
- TO PLAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To level; to make even.
Upon one wing, the artillery was drawn, every piece having his guard of pioneers to plain the ways. Hayward.
- TO PLAIN. v. n. [plaindre, je plains, Fr.] To lament; to wail.
Long since my voice is hoarse, and throat is sore,
With cries to skies, and curses to the ground;
But more I plain, I feel my woes the more. Sidney.
A plain song plain-singing voice requires
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.
The fox, that first this cause of grief did find,
Gan first thus plain his case with words unkind. Habberd.
The incessant weeping of my wife,
And piteous plainings of the pretty babes,
Forc'd me to seek delays. Shakespeare.
He to himself thus plain'd. Milton.
- PLAINDEALING. adj. [plain and deal.] Acting without art.
Though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man; it must not be denied, but I am a plaindealing villain. Shakespeare.
Bring a plaindealing innocence into a consistency with necessary prudence. L'Estrange.
- PLAINDEALING. n. f. Management void of art.
I am no politician; and was ever thought to have too little wit, and too much plaindealing for a statesman. Denham.
It looks as fate with nature's law may strive
To shew plaindealing once an age would thrive. Dryden.
- PLAINLY. adv. [from plain.]
1. Levelly; flatly.
2. Not subtilly; not speciously.
3. Without ornament.
4. Without gloss; sincerely.
You write to me with the freedom of a friend, setting down your thoughts as they occur, and dealing plainly with me in the matter. Pope.
5. In earnest; fairly.
They charged the enemies horse so gallantly, that they gave ground; and at last plainly run to a safe place. Clarendon.
6. Evidently; clearly; not obscurely.
St. Augustine acknowledgeth, that they are not only set down, but also plainly set down in scripture; so that he which heareth or readeth, may without difficulty understand. Hooker.
Coriolanus neither cares whether they love or hate him;
and out of his carelessness, let's them plainly see't. Shakespeare.

Giv'n by a brother's hand. Prior.
- PLAINITIVE. adj. [plaintif, Fr.] Complaining; lamenting; expressive of sorrow.
His careful mother heard the plaintive found, Encompass'd with her sea-green sisters round. Dryden.
The goddess heard,
Rose like a morning mist, and thus begun
To soothe the sorrows of her plaintive son. Dryden.
Can nature's voice
Plaintive be drown'd, or lessen'd in the noise, Though shouts as thunder loud assault the air. Prior.
Leviathans in plaintive thunders cry. Young.
- PLAINWORK. n. f. [plain and work.] Needlework as distinguished from embroidery; the common practice of sewing or making linen garments.
She went to plainwork, and to purring brooks. Pope.
- PLAIT. n. f. [corrupted from plight or plyght, from ply or fold.]
A fold; a double.
Should the voice directly strike the brain,
It would astonish and confuse it much;
Therefore these plaits and folds the sound restrain,
That it the organ may more gently touch.
Nor shall thy lower garments artful plait,
From thy fair side dependent to thy feet,
Arm their chaste beauties with a modest pride,
And double ev'ry charm they seek to hide. Prior.

PLA

- 'Tis very difficult to trace out the figure of a vest through all the plaits and foldings of the drapery. Addison.
- TO PLAIT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fold; to double.
The busy sylphs surround their darling care;
Some fold the sleeve, while others plait the gown;
And Betty's prais'd for labours not her own. Pope.
Will she on Sunday morn thy neckcloth plait. Gay.
2. To weave; to braid.
Let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair.
Peter iii. 3.
What the demands, incessant I'll prepare;
I'll weave her garlands, and I'll plait her hair;
My busy diligence shall deck her board,
For there at least I may approach my lord. Prior.
3. To intangle; to involve.
Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides,
Who covers faults at last with shame descends. Shakespeare.
- PLAITER. n. f. [from plait.] He that plaits.
PLAN. n. f. [plan, French.]
1. A scheme; a form; a model.
Remember, O my friends, the laws, the rights,
The generous plan of power delivered down
From age to age to your renown'd forefathers. Addison.
2. A plot of any building or ichnography; form of any thing laid down on paper.
Artists and plans reliev'd my solemn hours;
I founded palaces, and planted bow'rs. Prior.
- TO PLAN. v. a. [from the noun.] To scheme; to form in design.
Vouchsafe the means of vengeance to debate;
And plan with all thy arts the scene of fate. Pope.
PLANARY. adj. Pertaining to a plane. DiD.
PLANCHED. adj. [from planche.] Made of boards.
He hath a garden circummur'd with brick,
Whose Western side is with a vineyard backt,
And to that vineyard is a planched gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger key. Shakespeare.
- PLANCHER. n. f. [plancher, French.] A board; a plank.
Oak, cedar and chefnut are the best builders; some are best for planchers, as deal; some for tables, cupboards and desks, as walnuts. Bacon's Nat. History.
- PLANCHING. n. f. In carpentry, the laying the floors in a building. DiD.
- PLANE. n. f. [planus, Latin.] Plane is commonly used in popular language, and plane in geometry.]
1. A level surface.
Comets, as often as they are visible to us, move in planes inclined to the plane of the ecliptick in all kinds of angles. Bent.
Projectils would ever move on in the same right line, did not the air, their own gravity, or the ruggedness of the planes, on which they move, stop their motion. Chyren.
2. [Plane, Fr.] An instrument by which the surface of boards is smoothed.
The iron is set to make an angle of forty-five degrees with the sole of the plane. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
- TO PLANE. v. a. [planer, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To level; to smooth from inequalities.
The foundation of the Roman causeway was made of rough stone, joined with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of rough stone, in which the stones of the upper pavement were fixt. Arbutnot on Coins.
2. To smooth with a plane.
These hard woods are more properly scraped than planed.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
- PLANE-TREE. n. f. [platanus, Lat. plane, platan, Fr.]
The plane-tree hath an amentaceous flower, consisting of several slender stamina, which are all collected into spherical little balls and are barren; but the embryos of the fruit, which are produced on separate parts of the same trees, are turgid, and afterwards become large spherical balls, containing many oblong seeds intermixed with down: it is generally supposed, that the introduction of this tree into England is owing to the great lord chancellor Bacon. Miller.
The beech, the swimming alder and the plane. Dryd.
- PLANET. n. f. [planeta, Lat. πλανητης; planetta, Fr.]
Planets are the erratick or wandering stars, and which are not like the fixt ones always in the same position to one another:
we now number the earth among the primary planets, because we know it moves round the sun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus; and the moon is accounted among the secondary planets or satellites of the primary, since she moves round the earth: all the planets have, besides their motion round the sun, which makes their year, also a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth's revolving so makes our day and night: it is more than probable, that the diameters of all the planets are longer than their axes:
we know 'tis so in our earth; and Flamsteed and Cassini found it to be so in Jupiter: Sir Isaac Newton asserts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four

four miles; and indeed else the motion of the earth would make the sea rise so high at the equator, as to drown all the parts thereabouts. Harris.

Barbarous villains! hath this lovely face
Rul'd like a wand'ring planet over me,
And could it not inforce them to relent. Shakefp.

And planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

There are seven planets or errant stars in the lower orbs of heaven. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

PLANETARY. adj. [planetaire, Fr. from planet.]

1. Pertaining to the planets.
Their planetary motions and aspects. Milton.
To marble and to brass, such features give,
Describe the stars and planetary way,
And trace the footsteps of eternal day. Granvill.
2. Under the denomination of any particular planet.
Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's power,
That watch'd the moon and planetary hour,
With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd. Dryden.
I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and, I think,
I have a piece of that leaden planet in me; I am no way facetious. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 487.
3. Produced by the planets.
Here's gold, go on;
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vied city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
We make guilty of our disasters the fun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains by an enforced obedience of planetary influence. Shakespeare's King Lear.
4. Having the nature of a planet; erratick.
We behold bright planetary Jove,
Sublime in air through his wide province move;
Four second planets his dominion own,
And round him turn, as round the earth the moon. Blackm.

PLANETICAL. adj. [from planet.] Pertaining to planets.
Add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenilunary exemptions, the eclipses of sun and moon, conjunctions and oppositions planetical. Brown.

PLANETSTRUCK. adj. [planet and strike.] Blasted; sicere affatus.
Wonder not much if thus amaz'd I look,
Since I saw you, I have been planetstruck;
A beauty, and so rare, I did desire. Suckling.

PLANIFOLIOUS. adj. [planus and folium, Lat.] Flowers are so called, when made up of plain leaves, set together in circular rows round the center, whose face is usually uneven, rough and jagged. Diët.

PLANIMETRICAL. adj. [from planimetry.] Pertaining to the mensuration of plane surfaces.

PLANIMETRY. n. f. [planus, Lat. and μέτρον; planimetrie,
Fr.] The mensuration of plane surfaces.

PLANIPETALOUS. adj. [planus, Lat. and πέταλον.] Flatleaved, as when the small flowers are hollow only at the bottom, but flat upwards, as in dandelion and succory. Diët.

TO PLANISH. v. a. [from plane.] To polish; to smooth.
A word used by manufacturers.

PLANISPHERE. n. f. [planus, Lat. and sphaera.] A sphere projected on a plane; a map of one or both hemispheres.

PLANK. n. f. [planche, Fr.] A thick strong board.
They gazed on their ships, seeing them so great, and confisting of divers planks. Abbot's Description of the World.
The doors of plank were; their clove exquisite,
Kept with a double key. Chapman's Odyssey.
The smoothed plank new rub'd with balm. Milton.
Some Turkish bows are of that strength, as to pierce a plank of six inches. Wilkins.
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.
Be warn'd to shun the watry way,
For late I saw adrift disjointed planks,
And empty tombs erected on the banks. Dryden.

TO PLANK. v. a. [from plank.] To cover or lay with planks.
If you do but plank the ground over, it will breed salt-petre. Bacon's Natural History.
A feed of monstrous height appear'd;
The sides were plank'd with pine. Dryden.

PLANCONICAL. adj. [planus and conus.] Level on one side and conical on others.
Some few are planoconvex, whose superficies is in part level between both ends. Grew's Museum.

PLANOCONVEX. n. f. [planus and convexus.] Flat on the one side and convex on the other.
It took two object-glasses, the one a planoconvex for a fourteen feet telescope, and the other a large double convex for one of about fifty feet. Newton's Opticks.

PLANT. n. f. [plant, Fr. planta, Latin.]

1. Any thing produced from seed; any vegetable production.

PLA

What comes under this denomination, Ray has distributed under twenty-seven genders or kinds: 1. The imperfect plants, which do either totally want both flower and seed, or else seem to do so. 2. Plants producing either no flower at all, or an imperfect one, whose seed is so small as not to be dis-cernible by the naked eye. 3. Those whose seeds are not so small, as singly to be invisible, but yet have an imperfect or staminate flower; i. e. such a one, as is without the petals, having only the stamina and the perianthium. 4. Such as have a compound flower, and emit a kind of white juice or milk when their stalks are cut off or their branches broken off. 5. Such as have a compound flower of a discous figure, the seed pappus, or winged with down, but emit no milk.
6. The herbæ capitatae, or such whose flower is composed of many small, long, filituous or hollow flowers gathered round together in a round button or head, which is usually covered with a squamous or scaly coat. 7. Such as have their leaves entire and undivided into jaggs. 8. The corymbiferous plants, which have a compound discous flower, but the seeds have no down adhering to them. 9. Plants with a perfect flower, and having only one single seed belonging to each single flower. 10. Such as have rough, hairy or bristly seeds. 11.
The umbelliferous plants, which have a pentapetalous flower, and belonging to each single flower are two seeds, lying naked and joining together; they are called umbellife-rous, because the plants, with its branches and flowers, hath an head like a lady's umbrella; [1.] Such as have a broad flat seed almost of the figure of a leaf, which are encompassed round about with something like leaves. [2.] Such as have a longish seed, swelling out in the middle, and larger than the former. [3.] Such as have a shorter seed. [4.] Such as have a tubercle root. [5.] Such as have a wrinkled, channelated or striated seed. 12. The stellate plants, which are so called, because their leaves grow on their stalks at certain intervals or distances in the form of a radiant star: their flowers are really monopetalous, divided into four segments, which look like so many petals; and each flower is succeeded by two seeds at the bottom of it. 13. The asperifolia, or rough leaved plants: they have their leaves placed alternately, or in no certain order on their stalks; they have a monopetalous flower cut or divided into five partitions, and after every flower there succeed usually four seeds. 14. The suffrutices, or verticillate plants: their leaves grow by pairs on their stalks, one leaf right against another; their leaf is monopetalous, and usually in form of an helmet. 15. Such as have naked seeds, more than four, succeeding their flowers, which therefore they call polypermae plantae femine nudo; by naked seeds, they mean such as are not included in any seed pod.
16. Bacciferous plants, or such as bear berries. 17. Multi-filiquous, or corniculate plants, or such as have, after each flower, many distinct, long, slender, and many times crooked cafes or filiquæ, in which their seed is contained, and which, when they are ripe, open themselves and let the seeds drop out. 18. Such as have a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform, and after each flower a peculiar feed-case containing the seed, and this often divided into many distinct cells. 19. Such as have an uniform tetrapetalous flower, but bear these seeds in oblong filiquous cafes. 20.
Vasculiferous plants, with a tetrapetalous flower, but often anomalous. 21. Leguminous plants, or such as bear pulses, with a papilionaceous flower. 22. Vasculiferous plants, with a pentapetalous flower; these have, besides the common calix, a peculiar case containing their seed, and their flower consisting of five leaves. 23. Plants with a true bulbous root, which consists but of one round ball or head, out of whose lower part go many fibres to keep it firm in the earth:
the plants of this kind come up but with one leaf; they have no foot stalk, and are long and slender: the seed vessels are divided into three partitions: their flower is hexapetalous.
24. Such as have their fruits approaching to a bulbous form:
these emit, at first coming up, but one leaf, and in leaves, flowers and roots resemble the true bulbous plant. 25. Culmiferous plants, with a grassy leaf, are such as have a smooth hollow-jointed stalk, with one sharp-pointed leaf at each joint, encompassing the stalk, and set out without any foot stalk: their seed is contained within a chaffy husk. 26. Plants with a grassy leaf, but not culmiferous, with an imperfect or staminous flower. 27. Plants whose place of growth is uncertain and various, chiefly water plants.
Butchers and villains, Shakefp.
How sweet a plant have you untimely crop.
Between the vegetable and sensitive province there are plant-animals and some kind of insects arising from vegetables, that seem to participate of both. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
The next species of life above the vegetable, is that of sense; wherewith some of those productions, which we call plant-animals, are endowed. Grew's Cofmal.
It continues to be the same plant, as long as it partakes of the same life, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, vitally united to the living plant, in a like continued organization, conformable to that sort of plants. Locke.
Once

PLA

Once I was skill'd in ev'ry herb that grew,
And ev'ry plant that drinks the morning dew. Pope.

2. A sapling.
A man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks. Shakefp. As You like it.

Take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a stubborn stroke. Dryden.

3. [Planta, Lat.] The sole of the foot. Ansforth.

TO PLANT. v. a. [planto, Lat. planter, Fr.]

1. To put into the ground in order to grow; to set; to cultivate.
Plant not thee a grove of any trees near unto the altar of the Lord. Deutr. xvi. 21.
2. To procreate; to generate.
The honour'd gods the chairs of justice
Supply with worthy men, plant love amongst you. Shak.
It engenders choler, planteth anger;
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Than feed it with such overroasted flesh. Shakefp.
3. To place; to fix.
The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
In this hour,
I will advise you where to plant yourselves. Shakefp.
The mind through all her powers
Irradiate, there plant eyes. Milton.
When Turnus had assembled all his pow'rs,
His standard planted on Laurentum's tow'rs;
Trembling with rage, the Latian youth prepare
To join th' allies. Dryden's Æneis.
4. To settle; to establish: as, to plant a colony.
If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon.
Create, and therein plant a generation. Milton.
To the planting of it in a nation, the soil may be mellowed with the blood of the inhabitants; nay, the old extirpated, and the new colonies planted. Decay of Piety.
5. To fill or adorn with something planted: as, he planted the garden or the country.
To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
In all let nature never be forgot. Pope.
6. To direct properly: as, to plant a cannon.

PLANTAGE. n. f. [plantago, Lat.] An herb.
Truth, tir'd with iteration,
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shakefp.

PLANTAIN. n. f. [plantain, Fr. plantago, Lat.]
1. An herb.
The toad, being overcharged with the poison of the spider, as is ordinarily believ'd, has recourse to the plantain leaf.
More's Antidote against Atheism.
The most common simples are mugwort, plantain and horsetail. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. A tree in the West Indies, which bears an excellent fruit.
I long my careless limbs to lay
Under the plantain's shade. Waller.

PLANTAL. adj. [from plant.] Pertaining to plants.
There's but little similitude betwixt a tedious humidity and plantal germinations. Glanvill's Sceps.

PLANTATION. n. f. [plantatio, from planto, Latin.]

1. The act or practice of planting.
2. The place planted.
As swine are to gardens and orderly plantations, so are tumults to parliaments. King Charles.
Some peasants
Of the same soil their nursery prepare,
With that of their plantation; left the tree
Translated should not with the soil agree. Dryden.
Whole rising forests, not for pride or show,
But future buildings, future navies grow:
Let his plantations stretch from down to down,
First shade a country, and then raise a town. Pope.
Virgil, with great modesty in his looks, was seated by Calliope in the midst of a plantation of laurel. Addison.
3. A colony.
Planting of countries is like planting of woods; the principal thing, that hath been the destruction of most plantations, hath been the bafe and hasty drawing of profit in the first years; speedy profit is not to be neglected, as far as may stand with the good of the plantation. Bacon's Essays.
4. Introduction; establishment.
Episcopacy must be cast out of this church, after possession here, from the first plantation of christianity in this island. King Charles.

PLANTED. adj. [from plant.] This word seems in Shakespeare to signify, settled; well grounded.
Our court is haunted
With a refined traveller of Spain;
A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shakefp.

PLANTER. n. f. [planteur, Fr. from plant.]

1. One who sows, sets or cultivates; cultivator.
There stood Sabinus, planter of the vines,
And studiously surveys his gen'rous wines. Dryden.

PLA

What do thy vines avail,
Or olives, when the cruel battle mows
The planters, with their harvest immature? Philips.
That product only which our passions bear,
Eludes the planter's miserable care. Prior.

2. One who cultivates ground in the West Indian colonies.
A planter in the West Indies might mutter up, and lead all his family out against the Indians, without the absolute dominion of a monarch, descending to him from Adam. Locke.
He to Jamaica seems transported,
Alone, and by no planter courted. Swift's Miscellanies.
3. One who disseminates or introduces.
Had these writings differed from the sermons of the first planters of christianity in history or doctrine, they would have been rejected by those churches which they had formed. Add.

PLASH. n. f. [plafche, Dutch; platz, Danish.]

1. A small lake of water or puddle.
He leaves
A shallow plash to plunge him in the deep,
And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst. Shakefp.
Two frogs consulted, in the time of drought, when many plashes, that they had repaired to, were dry, what was to be done. Bacon.
I understand the aquatic or water frog, whereof in ditches and standing plashes we behold millions. Brown.
With filth the miscreant lies bewray'd,
Fall'n in the plash his wickedness had laid. Pope.
2. [From the verb to plash.] Branch partly cut off and bound to other branches.
In the plashing your quick, avoid laying of it too low and too thick, which makes the sap run all into the shoots, and leaves the plashes without nourishment. Mortimer.

TO PLASH. v. a. [plaffer, Fr.] To interweave branches.
Plant and plash quicklets. Evelyn.

PLASHY. adj. [from plash.] Watry; filled with puddles.
Near stood a mill in low and plashy ground. Betterton.

PLASM. n. f. [πλασμα, Gr.] A mould; a matrix in which any thing is cast or formed.
The shells served as plasms or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated, and afterwards freed from its ineffectual shell, is of the same shape with the cavity of the shell.
Woodward's Natural History.

PLASTER. n. f. [plastre, Fr. from πλαστω.]

1. Substance made of water and some absorbent matter, such as chalk or lime well pulverised, with which walls are overlaid or figures cast.
In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote upon the plaster of the wall. Dan. v. 5.
In the worst inn's worst room, with mat half-hung,
The floors of plaster, and the walls of dung. Pope.
Maps are hung up so high, to cover the naked plaster or waincot. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. [Emplastrum, Lat. in English, formerly emplaster.] A glutinous or adhesive falve.
Seeing the fore is whole, why retain we the plaster? Hook.
You rub the fore,
When you should bring the plaster. Shakefp.
It not only moves the needle in powder, but likewise, if incorporated with plasters, as we have made trial. Brown.
Plasters, that had any effect, must be by dispersing or repelling the humours. Temple's Miscellanies.

TO PLASTER. v. a. [plasterer, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To overlay as with plaster.
Boils and plagues
Plaster you o'er, that one infect another Against the wind a mile. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
The harlot's cheek beautied with plastring art. Shakefp.
A heart settled upon a thought of understanding, is as a fair plastering on the wall. Ecclesi. xxii. 17.
With a cement of flour, whites of eggs and stone powdered, piscina mirabilis is said to have the walls plastered.
Bacon.
Plaster the chinky hives with clay. Dryden.
The brain is grown more dry in its consistence, and receives not much more impression, than if you wrote with your finger on a plaster'd wall. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. To cover with a medicated plaster.

PLASTERER. n. f. [plasterer, Fr. from plaster.]

1. One whose trade is to overlay walls with plaster.
Thy father was a plasterer,
And thou thyself a shearmen. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
2. One who forms figures in plaster.
The plasterer makes his figures by addition, and the carver by subtraction. Watton.

PLASTICK. adj. [πλαστικός.] Having the power to give form.
Benign creator! let thy plastick hand Dispose its own effect. Prior.
There is not any thing strange in the production of the said formed metals, nor other plastick virtue concerned in shaping them into those figures, than merely the configuration of the particles. Woodward's Natural History.

PLASTRON. n. f. [French.] A piece of leather stuffed, which fences use, when they teach their scholars, in order to receive the puffs made at them. Trevoux.
Against the post their wicker shields they crush, Flourish the sword, and at the plastron puff. Dryden.
PLAT. v. a. [from plat.] To weave; to make by texture.
I have seen nests of an Indian bird curiously interwoven and platted together. Roy on the Creation.
I never found so much benefit from any expedient, as from a ring, in which my mistress's hair is platted in a kind of true lovers knot. Addison's Spectator, N° 245.
PLAT. n. f. [more properly plot; plot, Sax.] A small piece of ground.
Such pleasure took the serpent to behold
This flow'ry plat, the sweet recess of Eve. Milton.
On a plat of rising ground,

 1. Delightful; giving delight.
 The gods are just, and of our pleafant vices Make instruments to scourge us. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 What most he should dislike, seems pleafant to him;
 What looks offensive.
 How good and how pleafant it is for brethren to dwell in unity! Psalms.
 2. Grateful to the senses.
 Her univerfal face with pleafant green. Milton.
 3. Good humoured; cheerful.
 In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow, Thou'rt such a touchy, tefty, pleafant fellow. Addison.
 4. Gay; lively; merry.
 Let neither the power nor quality of the great, or the wit of the pleafant prevail with us to flatter the vices, or applaud the prophaneness of wicked men. Rogers's Sermons.
 5. Trifling; adapted rather to mirth than use.
 They, who would prove their idea of infinite to be positive, seem to do it by a pleafant argument, taken from the negation of an end, which being negative, the negation of it is positive. Locke.
PLEA'SANTLY. adv. [from pleafant.]
 1. In such a manner as to give delight.
 2. Gayly; merrily; in good humour.
 King James was wont pleafantly to say, that the duke of Buckingham had given him a secretary, who could neither write nor read. Clarendon.
 3. Lightly; ludicrously.
 Euthyphrus is of opinion, that Ulyffes speaks pleafantly to Elpenor. Broome.
PLEA'SANTNESS. n. f. [from pleafant.]
 1. Delightfulness; state of being pleafant.
 Doth not the pleafantness of this place carry in itself sufficient reward. Sidney.
 2. Gaiety; cheerfulness; merriment.
 It was refreshing, but composed, like the pleafantness of youth tempered with the gravity of age.
 He would fain put on some pleafantness, but was not able to conceal his vexation. Tillotfon.
PLEA'SANTRY. n. f. [plaisanterie, Fr.]
 1. Gaiety; merriment.
 The harshness of reasoning is not a little softened and smoothed by the infusions of mirth and pleafantry. Addison.
 Such kinds of pleafantry are difingenuous in criticism, the greatest masters appear serious and instructive. Addison.
 2. Sprightly saying; lively talk.
 The grave abound in pleafantries, the dull in repartees and points of wit. Addison's Spectator, N° 487.
TO PLEASE. v. a. [placeo, Lat. plaire, Fr.]
 1. To delight; to gratify; to humour.
 They please themselves in the children of strangers. If. ii. 6.
 Whether it were a whistling wind, or a pleafing fall of water running violently. Wisdom xvii. 18.
 Thou can't not be so pleas'd at liberty,
 As I shall be to find thou dar'st be free. Dryden.
 Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
 Whom folly pleases, and whose follies please. Pope.
 2. To satisfy; to content.
 Doctor Pinch
 Establish him in his true sense again,
 And I will please you what you will demand. Shakespeare.
 What next I bring shall please
 Thy wish exactly to thy heart's desire. Milton.
 3. To obtain favour from; to be pleas'd with, is to approve; to favour.
 This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleas'd. Mat.
 I have seen thy face, and thou wast pleas'd with me. Gen.
 Pickle their state whom God
 Most favours: who can please him long? Milton.
 4. To be PLEASED. To like. A word of ceremony.
 Many of our most skillful painters were pleas'd to recommend this author to me, as one who perfectly understood the rules of painting. Dryden's Duressy.
 To PLEASE. v. n.
 1. To give pleasure.
 What pleafing seem'd, for her now pleases more. Milton.

PLE

I found something that was more pleafing in them, than my ordinary productions. Dryden.
 2. To gain approbation.
 Their wine-offerings shall not be pleafing unto him. Hofea.
 3. To like; to chuse.
 Spirits, freed from mortal laws, with ease
 Assume what sexes and what shapes they please. Pope.
 4. To condescend; to comply. A word of ceremony.
 Please you, lords,
 In fight of both our battles we may meet. Shakespeare.
 The first words that I learnt were, to exprefs my desire, that he would please to give me my liberty. Gulliver.
PLEA'SER. n. f. [from please.] One that courts favour.
PLEA'SINGLY. adv. [from pleafing.] In such a manner as to give delight.
 Pleafingly troublesome thought and remembrance have been to me since I left you. Milton.
 Thus to herself she pleafingly began.
 The end of the art is pleafingly to deceive the eye. Dryden.
 He gains all points, who pleafingly confounds, Surprizes, varies, and conceals the bounds. Pope.
PLEA'SINGNESS. n. f. [from pleafing.] Quality of giving delight.
PLEA'SEMAN. n. f. [please and man.] A pickthank; an officious fellow.
 Some carry tale, some pleafeman, some flight zany,
 That knows the trick to make my lady laugh, Told our intents. Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.
PLEA'SURABLE. adj. [from pleafure.] Delightful; full of pleasure.
 Planting of orchards is very profitable, as well as pleafurable. Bacon.
 It affords a pleafurable habitation in every part, and that is the line ecliptick. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 There are, that the compounded fluid drain
 From different mixtures: to the blended streams,
 Each mutually correcting each, create A pleafurable medley. Philips.
 Our ill-judging thought Hardly enjoys the pleafurable taste. Prior.
PLEA'SURE. n. f. [plaisir, French.]
 1. Delight; gratification of the mind or senses.
 Pleafure, in general, is the consequent apprehension of a suitable object, suitably applied to a rightly disposed faculty. South's Sermons.
 A cause of men's taking pleafure in the fins of others, is, that poor spiritdness that accompanies guilt. South's Sermons.
 In hollow caves sweet echo quiet lies;
 Her name with pleafure once she taught the shore,
 Now Daphne's dead, and pleafure is no more. Pope.
 2. Loose gratification.
 Convey your pleafures in a spacious plenty,
 And yet seem cold. Shakespeare.
 Behold yon dame does shake the head to hear of pleafure's name. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 Not funk in carnal pleafure. Milton.
 3. Approbation.
 The Lord taketh pleafure in them that fear him. Psalms.
 4. What the will dictates.
 Use your pleafure; if your love do not persuade you to come, let not my letter. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
 He will do his pleafure on Babylon. If. xviii.
 5. Choice; arbitrary will.
 We ascribe not only effects depending on the natural period of time unto arbitrary calculations, and such as vary at pleafure, but confirm our tenets by the uncertain account of others. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
 Half their fleet offends
 His open side, and high above him shews;
 Upon the rest at pleafure he descends,
 And doubly harm'd, he double harm bestows. Dryden.
 Raise tempests at your pleafure. Dryden.
 We can at pleafure move several parts of our bodies. Locke.
 All the land in their dominions being acquired by conquest, was difpofed by them according to their pleafure. Arbutnot.
TO PLEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To please; to gratify. This word, though supported by good authority, is, I think, inelegant.
 Things, thus fet in order,
 Shall further thy harvest, and pleafure thee best. Tuffur.
 I count it one of my greatest afflictions, that I cannot pleafure such an honourable gentleman. Shakespeare.
 If what pleases him, shall pleafure you,
 Fight clofer, or good faith you'll catch a blow. Shakespeare.
 When the way of pleafuring and difpleafuring lieth by the favourite, it is impossible any should be overgreat. Bacon.
 Nothing is difficult to love; it will make a man cross his own inclinations to pleafure them whom he loves. Tillotfon.
PLEA'SUREFUL. adj. [pleafure and full.] Pleafant; delightful. Obsolete.
 This country, for the fruitfulness of the land and the conveniency of the sea, hath been reputed a very commodious and pleafureful country. Abbot's Descript. of the World.

PLEE'AN.

PLE

PLEBEIAN. n. f. [plebeian, Fr. plebeius, Lat.] One of the lower people.

Let him
Hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians.
You're plebeians, if they be senators.
Upon the least intervals of peace, the quarrels between the nobles and the plebeians would revive.

1. Popular; consisting of mean persons.
As swine are to gardens, so are tumults to parliaments, and plebeian concourses to publick councils.

2. Belonging to the lower ranks.
He through the midst unmark'd,
In shew plebeian angel militant
Of lowest order.

3. Vulgar; low; common.
To apply notions philosophical to plebeian terms; or to say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term or nomenclature for it, as the ancients used, they be but shifts of ignorance.

The differences of mouldable and not mouldable, scissible
and not scissible are plebeian notions.

Dishonour not the vengeance I design'd.
A queen! and own a base plebeian mind!

PLEDGE. n. f. [pledge, Fr. pieggio, Italian.]

1. Any thing put to pawn.
2. A gage; any thing given by way of warrant or security; a pawn.

These men at the first were only pitied; the great humility, zeal and devotion, which appeared to be in them, was in all men's opinion a pledge of their harmless meaning.

If none appear to prove upon thy person
Thy heinous, manifest and many treasons;
There is my pledge, I'll prove it on thy heart.

That voice their liveliest pledge
Of hope in fears and dangers.

Money is necessary both for counters and for pledges, and carrying with it even reckoning and security.

Hymen shall be aton'd, shall join two hearts,
And Aribert shall be the pledge of peace.

3. A surety; a bail; an hostage.
What purpose could there be of treason, when the Guian-nians offered to leave pledges, six for one.

Good sureties will we have for thy return,
And at thy pledges peril keep thy day.

TO PLEDGE. v. a. [pledger, Fr. piegiare, Italian.]

1. To put in pawn.
Asleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away;
He pledg'd it to the knight; the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond.

2. To give as warrant or security.
3. To secure by a pledge.

And here to pledge my vow, I give my hand.

4. To invite to drink, by accepting the cup or health after another.

The fellow, that Parts bread with him, and pledges
The breath of him in a divided draught,
Is th' readiest man to kill him.

To you noble lord of Westmoreland.
—I pledge your grace.

That flexanimous orator began the king of Homebia's health; he presently pledg'd it.

PLEDGET. n. f. [plagget, Dutch.] A small mass of lint.
I applied a pledget of basilicon.

PLEIADS. n. f. [pleiades, Lat. πλειάδες.] A northern constellation.

The pleiades before him danc'd,
Shedding sweet influence.

Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For pleiads, hyads and the northern car.

PLENARILY. adv. [from plenary.] Fully; completely.
The cause is made a plenary cause, and ought to be determined plenarily.

PLENARY. adj. [from plenus, Lat.] Full; complete.
I am far from denying that compliance on my part, for plenary consent it was not, to his destruction.

The cause is made a plenary cause.
A treatise on a subject should be plenary or full, so that nothing may be wanting, nothing which is proper omitted.

PLENARY. n. f. Decisive procedure.
A bare institution without induction does not make a plenary against the king, where he has a title to present.

PLENARINESS. n. f. [from plenary.] Fullness; completeness.
PLENILUNARY. adj. [from plenilunium, Lat.] Relating to the full moon.

If we add the two Egyptian days in every month, the interlunary and plenilunary exemptions, there would arise above an hundred more.

PLE

PLENIPOTENCE. n. f. [from plenus and potentia, Lat.] Fullness of power.

PLENIPOTENT. adj. [plenipotens, Lat.] Invested with full power.

My substitutes I send you, and create Plenipotens on earth, of matchless might Issuing from me.

PLENIPOTENTIARY. n. f. [plenipotentia, Fr.] A negotiator invested with full power.

They were only the plenipotentiary monks of the patriarchal monks.

PLENIST. n. f. [from plenus, Lat.] One that holds all space to be full of matter.

Those spaces, which the vacuists would have empty, because devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter by any sensible effects.

PLENITUDE. n. f. [plenitudo, from plenus, Lat. plenitudo, Fr.]
1. Fullness; the contrary to vacuity.

If there were every where an absolute plenitude and density without any pores between the particles of bodies, all bodies of equal dimensions would contain an equal quantity of matter, and consequently be equally ponderous.

2. Repletion; animal fullness; plentery.
Relaxation from plenitude is cured by spare diet.

3. Exuberance; abundance.
The plenitude of the pope's power of dispensing was the main question.

4. Completeness.
The plenitude of William's fame
Can no accumulated forces receive.

PLENTIFUL. adj. [from plenus.]

1. Copious; exuberant; abundant.
Author of evil, unknown till thy revolt
Now plenteous these acts of hateful strife.

2. Fruitful; fertile.
Two plenteous fountains the whole prospect crown'd
This through the gardens leads its streams around.

3. Take up the fifth part of the land in the seven plentius years.

4. Lab'ring the soil and reaping plenteous crop.
PLENTEOUSLY. adv. [from plentius.] Copiously; abundantly; exuberantly.

Thy due from me is tears,
Which nature, love and filial tenderness
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously.

God created the great whales and each Soul living, each that crept, which plenteously
The waters generated.

God proves us in this life, that he may the more plenteously reward us in the next.

PLENTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from plentius.] Abundance; fertility.

The seven years of plenteousness in Egypt were ended.
PLENTIFUL. adj. [plenty and full.] Copious; abundant; exuberant; fruitful.

To Amalthea he gave a country, bending like a horn;
whence the tale of Amalthea's plentiful horn.

He that is plentiful in expences, will hardly be preserved from decay.

If it be a long winter, it is commonly a more plentiful year.

When they had a plentiful harvest, the farmer had hardly any corn.

Alcibiades was a young man of noble birth, excellent education and a plentiful fortune.

PLENTIFULLY. adv. [from plentiful.] Copiously; abundantly.
They were not multiplied before, but they were at that time plentifully increased.

Born is plentifully furnished with water, there being a great multitude of fountains.

PLENTIFULNESS. n. f. [from plentiful.] The state of being plentiful; abundance; fertility.

PLENTY. n. f. [from plenus, full.]

1. Abundance; such a quantity as is more than enough.
Peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenties and joyful birth.

What makes land, as well as other things, dear, is plenty of buyers, and but few sellers; and so plenty of sellers and few buyers makes land cheap.

2. Fruitfulness; exuberance.
The teeming clouds
Descend in gladness plenty o'er the world.

3. It is used, I think, barbarously for plentiful.
To graze with thy calves,
Where water is plenty.

If reasons were as plenty as black berries, I would give no man a reason on compulsion.

4. A state in which enough is had and enjoyed.
Ye shall eat in plenty and be satisfied, and praise the Lord.

PLI

PLEONASM. n. f. [pleonasm, Fr. pleonasmus, Lat.] A figure of rhetoric, by which more words are used than are necessary.

PLESH. n. f. [A word used by Spenser instead of plesh, for the convenience of rhyme.] A puddle; a boggy marsh.

Out of the wound the red blood flowed fresh,
That underneath his feet soon made a purple plesh.

PLETHORA. n. f. [from πλεθώρα.] The state in which the vessels are fuller of humours than is agreeable to a natural state or health; arises either from a diminution of some natural evacuations, or from debauch and feeding higher or more in quantity than the ordinary powers of the viscera can digest: evacuations and exercise are its remedies.

The diseases of the fluids are a plethora, or too great abundance of laudable juices.

PLETHORETICK. adj. [from plethora.] Having a full habit.
PLETHORICK. adj. [from plethora.]

The fluids, as they consist of spirit, water, salts, oil and terrestrial parts, differ according to the redundancy of the whole or of any of these; and therefore the plethorick are phlegmatick, oily, saline, carthy or dry.

PLETHORY. n. f. [plethora, Fr. from πλεθώρα.] Fullness of habit.

In too great repletion, the elastick force of the tube throws the fluid with too great a force, and subjects the animal to the diseases depending upon a plethora.

PLEVIN. n. f. [plevina, Fr. plevina, law Lat.] In law, a warrant or assurance. See REPLEVIN.

PLEURISY. n. f. [πleuritis, Fr. pleuritis, Lat.] Pleurisy is an inflammation of the pleura, though it is hardly distinguishable from an inflammation of any other part of the breast, which are all from the same cause, a stagnated blood; and are to be remedied by evacuation, suppuration or expectoration, or all together.

PLEURITICAL. adj. [from pleurisy.]
PLEURITICK. adj. [from pleurisy.]

1. Dificated with a pleurisy.
The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleurittick people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat.

2. Denoting a pleurisy.
His blood was pleurittick, it had neither colour nor consistence.

PLYABLE. adj. [pliable, from plier, Fr. to bend.]
1. Easy to be bent; flexible.

Though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt, and make the very law so pliable and bending, that it shall be impossible to be broke.

Whether the different motions of the animal spirits may have any effect on the mould of the face, when the lineam-ents are pliable and tender, I shall leave to the curious.

2. Flexible of disposition; easy to be persuaded.
PLIABLENESS. n. f. [from pliable.]

1. Flexibility; easiness to be bent.
2. Flexibility of mind.

Compare the ingenious pliantness to virtuous counsels in youth, as it comes fresh out of the hands of nature, with the confirmed obliquity in most sorts of sin, that is to be found in an aged sinner.

PLIANCY. n. f. [from pliant.] Easiness to be bent.
Had not exercise been necessary, nature would not have given such an activity to the limbs, and such a pliancy to every part, as produces those compressions and extensions necessary for the preservation of such a system.

PLIANT. adj. [pliant, French.]

1. Bending; tough; flexible; flexible; lithe; limber.
An anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether the fibres may not be made up of a finer and more pliant thread.

2. Easy to take a form.
Particles of heav'nly fire,
Or earth but new divided from the sky,
And pliant still retain'd th' ethereal energy.

As the wax melts that to the flame I hold,
Pliant and warm may fill her heart remain,
Soft to the print, but ne'er turn hard again.

3. Easily complying.
In languages the tongue is more pliant to all sounds, the joins more supple to all feats of activity, in youth than afterwards.

Those, who bore bulwarks on their backs,
Now practise ev'ry pliant gesture,
Op'ning their trunk for ev'ry tester.

4. Easily persuaded.
The will was then ductile and pliant to right reason, it met the dictates of a clarified understanding halfway.

PLIANTNESS. n. f. [from pliant.] Flexibility; toughness.
Greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliantness or softness.

PLIATURE. n. f. [plicatura, from plico, Lat.] Fold; double.
PLICATION. n. f. Plication is used somewhere in Clarissa.

PLIERS. n. f. [from ply.] An instrument by which any thing is laid hold on to bend it.

PLO

Pliers are of two sorts, flat-nosed and round-nosed; their office is to hold and fasten upon a small work, and to fit it in its place: the round-nosed pliers are used for turning or boring wire or small plate into a circular form.

I made a detention by a small pair of pliers.

TO PLIGHT. v. a. [plichten, Dutch.]

1. To pledge; to give as surety.
He plighted his right hand
Unto another love, and to another land.

Met the night mare, and her name told,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight.

I again in Henry's royal name,
Give thee her hand for sign of plighted faith.

Here my inviolable faith I plight,
Lo, thou be my defence, I, thy delight.

New loves you seek,
New vows to plight, and plighted vows to break.

I'll never mix my plighted hands with thine,
While such a cloud of mischiefs hangs about us.

2. To braid; to weave. [from plico, Lat. whence to ply or bend, and plight, pleight or plait, a fold or flexure.]
Her head she fondly would aguide
With gaudie girlonds, or fresh flowrets dight
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight.

I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live,
And play i' th' plighted clouds.

PLIGHT. n. f. [This word skinner imagines to be derived from the Dutch, plicht, office or employment; but Junius observes, that plucht, Saxon, signifies distress or pressing danger; whence,
I suppose, plight was derived, it being generally used in a bad sense.]

1. Condition; state.
When as the careful dwarf had told,
And made ensample of their mournful plight Unto his master, he no longer would
There dwell in peril of like painful plight.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are.

Befeech your highness,
My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it.

They in lowliest plight repentant stood Praying.

Thou must not here
Lie in this miserable loathsome plight.

Most perfect hero tried in heaviliest plight
Of labours huge and hard.

2. Good case.
Who abufeth his cattle and starves them for meat,
By carting or plowing, his gain is not great;
Where he that with labour can use them aright,
Hath gain to his comfort, and cattle in plight.

3. Pledge; gage. [from the verb.]
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry Half my love with him, half my care and duty.

4. [From to plight.] A fold; a pucker; a double; a purtle;
a plait.

Yclad, for fear of scorching air,
All in a silken camus, lilly white,
Purled upon with many a folded plight.

PLINTH. n. f. [πλινθίς.] In architecture, is that square member which serves as a foundation to the base of a pillar; Vitruvius calls the upper part or abacus of the Tuscan pillar, a plinth, because it resembles a square tile: moreover, the same denomination is sometimes given to a thick wall, wherein there are two or three bricks advanced in form of a plat-band.

TO PLOD. v. n. [ploeghen, Dutch. Skinner.]

1. To toil; to moid; to drudge; to travel.
A plodding diligence brings us sooner to our journey's end, than a fluttering way of advancing by starts.

He knows better than any man, what is not to be written; and never hazards himself so far as to fail, but plods on deliberately, and, as a grave man ought, puts his staff before him.

Th' unletter'd christian, who believes in grois,
Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss.

2. To travel laboriously.
Rogues, plod away o' the hoof, seek shelter, pack. Sh.
If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I Glide thither in a day.

Hast thou not held my stirrup?
Bare-headed, plodded by my foot-cloth mule,
And thought thee happy when I shook my head?

Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon,
With faintest vow my faults to have amended.

3. To study.

PLO

3. To study closely and dully.
Universal plodding prisons up
The nimble spirits in the arteries;
As motion and long-during action tires
The finewy vigour of the traveller. Shakesp.
He plods to turn his am'rous suit
T' a plea in law, and prosecute. Hudibras, p. iii.
She reason'd without plodding long, Swift's Miscel.
Nor ever gave her judgment wrong.
PLO'DDER. n. f. [from plod.] A dull heavy laborious man.
Study is like the heav'n's glorious sun,
That will not be deep search'd with faucy looks;
What have continual plodders ever won,
Save base authority from other's books? Shakesp.
PLOT. n. f. [plot, Saxon. See PLAT.]
1. A small extent of ground.
It was a chosen plot of fertile land,
Amongst wide waves let like a little nest,
As if it had by nature's cunning hand
Been choicely picked out from all the rest. Fairy Queen.
Plant ye with alders or willowes a plot,
Where yeerely as needeth moe poles may be got. Tusser.
Many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villainy. Shakespeare.
Were there but this fingle plot to lose,
This mould of Marcus, they to dust would grind it,
And throw't against the wind. Shakesp.
When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then we must rate the cost of the erection. Shakesp.
Weeds grow not in the wild uncultivated waste, but in garden plots under the negligent hand of a gardener. Locke.
2. A plantation laid out.
Some goddesses inhabiteth this region, who is the soul of this soil; for neither is any less than a goddess, worthy to be shrined in such a heap of pleasures; nor any less than a goddess could have made it to perfect a plot. Sidney.
3. A form; a scheme; a plan.
The law of England never was properly applied unto the Irish nation, as by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal themselves under the same by their humble carriage. Spenser on Ireland.
4. [Imagined by Skinner to be derived from platform, but evidently contracted from complot, Fr.] A conspiracy; a secret design formed against another.
I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him. Shakesp.
Easy seems the thing to every one,
That nought could cross their plot, or them suppress. Dan.
5. An intrigue; an affair complicated, involved and embarrassed;
the story of a play, comprising an artful involution of affairs, unravelled at last by some unexpected means.
If the plot or intrigue must be natural, and such as springs from the subject, then the winding up of the plot must be a probable consequence of all that went before. Pope.
Nothing must be fung between the acts,
But what some way conduces to the plot. Rafsonmnn.
Our author
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice,
Made him observe the subject and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities, what not? Pope.
They deny the plot to be tragical, because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical. Gay.
6. Stratagem; secret combination to any ill end.
Frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milton.
7. Contrivance; deep reach of thought.
Who says he was not
A man of much plot,
May repent that false accusation;
Having plotted and pen'd
Six plays to attend
The farce of his negotiation. Denham.
TO PLOT. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To form schemes of mischief against another, commonly against those in authority.
The subtle traitor
This day had plotted in the council house
To murder me. Shakespeare's Richard III.
The wicked plotters against the just. Psalms xxxvii. 12.
He who envies now thy state,
Who now is plotting how he may seduce Thee from obedience. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
The wolf that round th' inclosure prowls
To leap the fence, now plots not on the fold. Dryden.
2. To contrive; to scheme.
The count tells the marquis of a flying noise, that the prince did plot to be secretly gone; to which the marquis an-swer'd, that though love had made his highness steal out of his own country, yet fear would never make him run out of Spain. Wotton.
TO PLOT. v. a.
1. To plan; to contrive.

to receive the seed.
Look how the purple flower, which the plough
Hath torn in sunder, languishing doth die. Peasam.
Some ploughs differ in the length and shape of their beams;
some in the share, others in the coulter and handles. Mort.
In ancient times the sacred plough employ'd
The kings and awful fathers. Thomson.
2. A kind of plane.
Ainsworth.
TO PLOUGH. v. n. TO PRACTISE aration; to turn up the ground in order to sow seed.
Rebellion, infolence, sedition
We ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Doth the ploughman plough all day to sow? Jf. xxviii. 24.
They only give the land one ploughing, and sow white oats, and harrow them as they do black. Mortimer.
TO PLOUGH. v. a.
1. To turn up with the plough.
Let the Volscians
Plough Rome and harrow Italy. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Should any slave, so lewd, belong to you?
No doubt you'd find the rogue, in letters bound,
To work in bridewell, or to plough your ground. Dryden.
A man may plough, in stiff grounds the first time fallowed, an acre a day. Mortimer.
2. To bring to view by the plough.
Another of a dusky colour, near black; there are of these frequently ploughed up in the fields of Weldon. Woodward.
3. To furrow; to divide.

He plough'd the Tyrrhene seas with sails display'd. Aldif.
With speed we plough the watry way,
My power shall guard thee. Pope's Odyssey.
4. To tear; to furrow.
Let
Patient Octavia plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
PLOUGHBOY. n. f. [plough and boy.] A boy that follows the plough; a coarse ignorant boy.
A ploughboy, that has never seen any thing but thatched houses and his parish church, imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house. Watts's Logick.
PLOUGHMAN. n. f. [from plough.] One who ploughs or cultivates ground.
When the country shall be replenish'd with corn, as it will, if well followed; for the country people themselves are great ploughers and small spenders of corn: then there should be good store of magazines erected. Spenser.
PLOUGHLAND. n. f. [plough and land.] A farm for corn.
Who hath a ploughland casts all his seed-corn there,
And yet allows his ground more corn should bear. Danne.
In this book are entered the names of the manors or inhabited townships, the number of ploughlands that each contains, and the number of the inhabitants. Hare.
PLOUGHMAN. n. f. [plough and man.]
1. One that attends or uses the plough.
When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
The cuckoo then on ev'ry tree, Shakespeare.
God provides the good things of the world, to serve the needs of nature by the labours of the ploughman. Taylor.
The careful ploughman doubting stands. Milton.
Your reign no less assures the ploughman's peace,
Than the warm sun advances his increase. Waller.
The merchant gains by peace, and the soldiers by war, the shepherd by wet seasons, and the ploughmen by dry. Temple.

PLOUGHSHARE. n. f. [plough and share.] The part of the plough that is perpendicular to the coulter.
As the earth was turned up, the ploughshare lighted upon a great stone; we pulled that up, and so found some pretty things. Sidney, b. ii.
The pretty innocent walks blindfold among burning plough- shares without being scorched. Addison's Spectator.
TO PLUCK. v. a. [pluccian, Sax. plucken, Dutch.]
1. To pull with nimbleness or force; to snatch; to pull; to draw; to force on or off; to force up or down; to act upon with violence. It is very generally and licentiously used, particularly by Shakespeare.
It seem'd better unto that noble king to plant a peaceable government among them, than by violent means to pluck them under. Spenser on Ireland.
You were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off. Shakesp.
Pluck down my officers, break my decrees,
For now a time is come to mock at form. Shakesp.

Was born to that prodigious height,
That learn'd philosophers maintain,
It ne'er came back.

The faculties that were given us for the glory of our matter, are turned pointblank against the intention of them: L'Estr.
Eftius declares, that although all the schoolmen were for Latria to be given to the cross, yet that it is pointblank against the definition of the council of Nice.

23. Point de vue; exact or exactly in the point of view.

Every thing about you should demonstrate a careless defolation; but you are rather point de vue in your accoutrements, as loving yourself, than the lover of another.

I will baffle Sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance,
I will be point de vue the very man.

Men's behaviour should be like their apparel, not too straight or point de vue, but free for exercise.

To POINT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sharpen; to forge or grind to a point.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain; now that fear is sharpened and pointed, by the Spaniards late enterprizes upon the Palatinate.

Part-new grind the blunted ax, and point the dart.

What help will all my heavy friends afford,
When to my breast I lift the pointed sword.

Lop for thy fewel old pollenger grown,

That hinder the corn or the grail to be mown. Tusser.

POLLER. n. f. [from poll.]

1. Robber; pillager; plunderer.

The poller and exacter of fees justifies the resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, whereunto while the sheep flies for defence, he loses part of the fleece. Bacon's Essays.

2. He who votes or polls.

POLLIVIL. n. f. [poll and evil.]

Pollivil is a large swelling, inflammation or imposthume in the horse's poll or nape of the neck, just between the ears towards the mane. Farrier's Dict.

POLLLOCK. n. f. A kind of fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with shellfish, sea-hedgehogs, scallops; and flat, as round, pilcherd, herring and pollack. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

To POLLUTE. v. a. [polluo, Lat. polluer, Fr.]

1. To make unclean, in a religious sense; to defile.

Hot and peevish vows

Are polluted offerings, more abhor'd

Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. Shakep.

2. To taint with guilt.

She woos the gentle air,

To hide her guilty front with innocent snow,

And on her naked shame,

Pollute with sinful blame, Milton.

3. To corrupt by mixtures of ill.

Envy you my praise, and would destroy

With grief my pleasures, and pollute my joy? Dryden.

4. Milton uses this word in an uncommon construction.

Polluted from the end of his creation. Milton.

POLLUTEDNESS. n. f. [from pollute.] Defilement; the state of being polluted.

POLLUTER. n. f. [from pollute.] Defiler; corrupter.

Ev'n he, the king of men,

The foul polluters of his bed enjoy. Dryden's Æneis.

POLLUTION. n. f. [pollutio, Fr. pollutio, Latin.]

1. The act of defiling.

The contrary to consecration is pollution, which happens in churches by homicide, and burying an excommunicated person in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. The state of being defiled; defilement.

Their strife pollution brings

Upon the temple. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

POLLTRON. n. f. [pollice truncato, from the thumb cut off; it being once a practice of cowards to cut off their thumbs, that they might not be compelled to serve in war. Saunsaife.

Menage derives it from the Italian polltro, a bed; as cowards feign themselves sick a bed: others derive it from polltro or pollro, a young unbroken horse.] A coward; a nidget; a scoundrel.

Patience is for polltrons.

They that are bruised with wood or fists,

And think one beating may for once

Suffice, are cowards and polltrons. Hudibras, p. ii.

For who but a polltron poll'd with fear,

Such haughty insolence can tamely bear. Dryden.

POLY. n. f. [poliam, Lat.] An herb.

POLY. [πολύ.] A prefix often found in the composition of words derived from the Greek, and intimating multitude: as, polygon, a figure of many angles; polyrus, an animal with many feet.

POLYACOUSMICK. adj. [πολύς and ἀκούω.] Any thing that multiplies or magnifies sounds. Diæ.

POLYANTHOS. n. f. [πολύς and ἄνθος.] A plant.

Great varieties of polyanthos are annually produced, and its flowers are so numerous on one stalk, and so beautifully striped, that they are not inferior to auriculas in beauty. Miller.

POL

The daisy, primrose, violet darkly blue,

And polyanthos of unnumber'd dyes. Thomson.

POLYEDRICAL. adj. [from πολυεδρῆς; polyedre, Fr.] Having many sides.

The protuberant particles may be spherical, elliptical, cylindrical, polyedrical, and some very irregular; and according to the nature of these, and the situation of the lucid body, the light must be variously effected. Boyle.

A tubercle of a pale brown spar, had the exterior surface covered with small polyedrous crystals, pellucid, with a cast of yellow. Woodward.

POLYGAMIST. n. f. [from polygamy.] One that holds the lawfulness of more wives than one at a time.

POLYGAMY. n. f. [polygamie, Fr. πολυγαμία.] Plurality of wives.

Polygamy is the having more wives than one at once. Locke.

They allow no polygamy: they have ordained, that none do intermarry or contract, until a month be past from their first interview. Bacon.

Christian religion, prohibiting polygamy, is more agreeable to the law of nature, that is, the law of God, than mahometism that allows it; for one man, his having many wives by law, signifies nothing, unless there were many women to one man in nature also. Gravitt.

POLYGLOT. adj. [πολύγλωττος; polyglotte, Fr.] Having many languages.

The polyglot or linguist is a learned man. Howell.

In the midst of all the place was a fair pond, whose shak-ing crystal was a perfect mirror to all the other beauties, so that it bare shew of two gardens. Sidney.
Through bogs and mires, and oft through pond or pool,
There swallow'd up. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Had marine bodies been found in only one place, it might have been suspected, that the sea was, what the Caspian is, a great pond or lake, confined to one part. Woodward.
His building is a town,
His pond an ocean. Pope.
TO POND. v. a. To ponder. A corrupt obsolete word.
O my liege lord, the god of my life,
Plea'seth you pond your suppliant's plaint. Spenser.
TO PONDER. v. a. [pondere, Latin.] To weigh mentally; to consider; to attend.
Mary kept all these things, and ponder'd them in her heart. Luke ii. 19.
Colours, popularities and circumstances sway the ordinary judgment, not fully pondering the matter. Bacon.
This ponder, that all nations of the earth Shall in his feed be blessed. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
Intent he seem'd,
Pond'ring future things of wond'rous weight. Dryden.
TO PONDER. v. n. To think; to muse. With en. This is an improper use of the word.
This tempest will not give me leave to ponder
On things would hurt me more. Shakep. King Lear.
Whom, pond'ring thus on human miseries,
When Venus saw, her heav'nly fire bespoke. Dryden.
PONDERAL. adj. [from pondus, Lat.] Estimated by weight; distinguished from numeral.
Thus did the money drachma in process of time decrease; but all the while we may suppose the ponderal drachma to have continued the same, just as it has happened to us, as well as our neighbours, whose ponderal libra remains as it was, though the nummery hath much decreased. Arbutnot.
PONDERABLE. adj. [from pondere, Lat.] Capable to be weighed; measurable by scales.
The bite of an asp will kill within an hour, yet the impression is scarce visible, and the poison communicated not ponderable. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PONDERATION. n. f. [from pondere, Latin.] The act of weighing.
While we perspire, we absorb the outward air, and the quantity of perspired matter, found by ponderation, is only the difference between that and the air imbibed. Arbutnot.
PONDERER. n. f. [from pondere.] He who ponds.
PONDEROSITY. n. f. [from ponderosus.] Weight; gravity; heaviness.
Crystal will sink in water, as carrying in its own bulk a greater ponderosity than the space in any water it doth occupy. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Gold is remarkable for its admirable ductility and ponderosity, wherein it excels all other bodies. Roj.
PONDEROUS. adj. [ponderosus, from pondus, Lat.]
1. Heavy; weighty.
It is more difficult to make gold, which is the most ponderous and material amongst metals, of other metals less ponderous and material, than, via versa, to make silver of lead or quicksilver; both which are more ponderous than silver. Bacon.
His pond'rous shield behind him cast. Milton.

P O N

Upon laying a weight in one of the scales, inscribed etern-ity, though I threw in that of time, prosperity, affliction, wealth and poverty, which seemed very ponderous, they were not able to stir the opposite balance. Addison.
Because all the parts of an undistributed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed according to the difference of it, any concretion, that can be supposed to be naturally made in such a fluid, must be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Important; momentous.
If your more ponderous and settl'd project
May suffer alteration, I'll point you Where you shall have receiving shall become you. Shakep.
3. forcible; strongly impulsive.
Imagination hath more force upon things living, than things inanimate; and upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.
Impatient of her load,
And lab'ring underneath the pond'rous god,
The more she strove to shake him from her breast,
With far superior force he press'd.
Press'd with the pond'rous blow,
Down sinks the ship within th' abyss below. Dryden.
PONDEROUSLY. adv. [from ponderous.] With great weight.
PONDEROUSNESS. n. f. [from ponderous.] Heaviness; weight; gravity.

2. The pope.
PONTIFICAL. adj. [pontifical, Fr. pontificalis, Lat.]
1. Belonging to an high priest.
2. Popish.
It were not amiss to answer by a herald the next pontifical attempt, rather sending defiance than publishing answers. Ral.
The pontifical authority is as much superior to the regal, as the sun is greater than the moon. Baker.
3. Splendid; magnificent.
Thus did I keep my person fresh and new,
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Ne'er seen, but wonder'd at. Shakep. Henry IV.
4. [From pons and facio.] Bridge-building. This sense is, I believe, peculiar to Milton, and perhaps was intended as an equivocal satire on popery.
Now had they brought the work by wond'rous art
Pontifical, a ridge of pendent rock
Over the vex'd abyss. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
PONTIFICAL. n. f. [pontifical, Lat.] A book containing rites and ceremonies ecclesiastical.
What the Greek and Latin churches did, may be seen in pontificals, containing the forms for consecrations. South.

Met his offspring dear. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
PONTLEVIS. n. f. In horsemanship, is a disorderly resisting action of a horse in disobedience to his rider, in which he rears up several times running, and rises up so upon his hind-legs, that he is in danger of coming over. Bailey.
PONTON. n. f. [French.]
Ponton is a floating bridge or invention to pass over water: it is made of two great boats placed at some distance from one another, both planked over, as is the interval between them, with rails on their sides: the whole so strongly built as to carry over horse and cannon. Military Dict.
The black prince pass'd many a river without the help of pontons. Spektor, N° 165.
PONTON. n. f. [I know not the original of this word.] A small horse.
POOL. n. f. [pul, Saxon; pool, Dutch.] A lake of standing water. Moils, as it cometh of moisture, so the water must but slide, and not stand in a pool. Bacon.
Sea he had search'd, and land,
From Eden over Pontus, and the pool
Mzotis. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Love oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind,
Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And brushing o'er, adds vigour to the pool. Dryden.
The circling streams, once thought the pools of blood,
From dark oblivion Harvey's name shall save. Dryden.
After the deluge, we suppose the vallies and lower grounds, where the descent and derivation of the water was not so easy, to have been full of lakes and pools. Burnet.
POOR. n. f. [pauvre, Fr. paupis, Lat.] The hindmost part of the ship.
Some sat upon the top of the poor weeping and wailing,
Till the sea swallowed them. Sidney, b. ii.
The poor was beaten gold. Shakep. Ant. and Cleop.
Perceiving that the pigeon had only lost a piece of her tail through the next opening of the rocks, they pass'd safe, only the end of their poor was bruited. Raleigh.
He was openly set upon the poor of the gally. Knolles.
With wind in poor, the vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way. Dryden.
POOR. adj. [pauvre, Fr. pobre, Spanish.]
1. Not rich; indigent; necessitous; oppressed with want.
Poor cuckoldly knave.—I wrong him to call him poor; they say he hath masses of money. Shakespeare.
Who builds a church to God, and not to fame,
Will never mark the marble with his name;
Go search it there, where to be born and die,
Of rich and poor makes all the history. Pope.
2. Trifling; narrow; of little dignity, force or value.
A conservatory of snow and ice used for delicacy to cool wine, is a poor and contemptible use, in respect of other uses that may be made of it. Bacon's Natural History.
How poor are the imitations of nature in common course of experiments, except they be led by great judgment. Bacon.
When he delights in sin, as he observes it in other men, he is wholly transformed from the creature God first made him; nay, has confuted those poor remainders of good that the sin of Adam left him. South.
That I have wronged no man, will be a poor plea or apology at the last day; for it is not for rapin, that men are formally impeached and finally condemned; but I was an hungry, and ye gave me no meat. Calamy's Sermons.
3. Paltry; mean; contemptible.
A poor number it was to conquer Ireland to the pope's use. Bacon.
And if that wisdom still wife ends propound,
Why made he man, of other creatures, king;
When, if he perish here, there is not found
In all the world to poor and vile a thing? Davies.
The marquis, making haste to Scarborough, embarked in a poor vessel. Clarendon, b. viii.
We have seen how poor and contemptible a force has been raised by those who appeared openly. Addis. Freeholder.

9. Not good; not fit for any purpose.
I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking: I could with courtesy would invent some other entertainment. Shakep.
10. The Poor. [collectively.] Those who are in the lowest rank of the community; those who cannot subsist but by the charity of others; but it is sometimes used with laxity for any not rich.
From a confin'd well manag'd store,
You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.
Never any time since the reformation can shew so many poor amongst the widows and orphans of churchmen, as this particular time. Sprat's Sermons.
Has God cast thy lot amongst the poor of this world, by denying thee the plenty of this life, or by taking them away?
this may be preventing mercy; for much mischief riches do to the souls of men. South's Sermons.
The poor dare nothing tell but flatt'ring news. Dryden.
11. Barren; dry: as, a poor soil.
12. Lean; starved; emaciated: as, a poor horse.

If you sow one ground with the same kind of grain, it will prosper but poorly. Bacon.
3. Meanly; without spirit.
Your constancy
Hath left you unattended: be not lost
So poorly in your thoughts. Shakep. Macbeth.
Nor is their courage or their wealth so low,
That from his wars they poorly would retire. Dryden.
4. Without dignity.
You meaner beauties of the night,
That poorly satisfy our eyes,
More by your number than your light,
You common people of the skies;
What are you when the sun shall rise. Wotton.
- POORJOHN. n. f. [from poor.]
POORNESS. n. f. [from poor.]
1. Poverty; indigence; want.
If a prince should complain of the poorness of his exchequer, would he be angry with his merchants, if they brought him a cargo of good bullion. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. Meanness; lowness; want of dignity.
The Italian opera seldom sinks into a poorness of language, but, amidst all the meanness of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison.
There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery. Addison.
3. Sterility; barrenness.
The poorness of the herbs shews the poorness of the earth, especially if in colour more dark. Bacon.
Enquire the differences of metals which contain other metals, and how that agrees with the poorness or riches of the metals in themselves. Bacon.
- POORSPIRITED. adj. [poor and spirit.] Mean; cowardly.
Mirvan! poorspirited wretch! thou hast deceiv'd me. Den.
- POORSPIRITEDNESS. n. f. Meanness; cowardice.
A cause of men's taking pleasure in the sins of others, is,
from that meanness and poorspiritedness that accompanies guilt. South's Sermons.
- P. n. f. [poppy, Lat.] A small smart quick found. It is formed from the found.
I have several ladies, who could not give a pop loud enough to be heard at the farther end of the room, who can now discharge a fan, that it shall make a report like a pocket-pistol. Addison's Spectator, N° 102.
- TO POP. v. n. [from the noun.] To move or enter with a quick, sudden and unexpected motion.
He that kill'd my king,
Popt in between th' election and my hopes. Shakep.
A boat was sunk and all the folk drowned, saving one only woman, that in her first popping up again, which most living things account, espied the boat risen likewise, and floating by her, got hold of the boat, and sat affide upon one of its sides. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
- I startled at his popping upon me unexpectedly. Addison.
As he scratched to fetch up thought,
Forth popt'd the spirit to thin. Swift's Miscellanies.
Others have a trick of popping up and down every moment, from their paper to the audience, like an idle school-boy. Swift.
- TO POP. v. a.
1. To put out or in suddenly, sily or unexpectedly.
That is my brother's plea,
The which if he can prove, he pops me out
At least from fair five hundred pound a year. Shakep.

POP

- He popped a paper into his hand. Milton.
A fellow, finding somewhat prick him, popt his finger upon the place. L'Estrange's Fables.
The commonwealth popped up its head for the third time under Brutus and Cassius, and then sunk for ever. Dryden.
Didst thou never pop
Thy head into a tinman's shop? Prior.
2. To shift.
If their curiosity leads them to ask what they should not know, it is better to tell them plainly, that it is a thing that belongs not to them to know, than to pop them off with a falshood. Locke on Education.
- POPE. n. f. [papa, Lat. papas.]
1. The bishop of Rome.
I refuse you for my judge; and Appeal unto the pope to be judg'd by him. Shakep.
He was organist in the pope's chapel at Rome. Peacocks.
Christianity has been more oppressed by those that thus fought for it, than those that were in arms against it; upon this score, the pope has done her more harm than the Turk. Decay of Piety.
2. A small fish.
A pope, by some called a ruffe, is much like a perch for shape, but will not grow bigger than a gudgeon: he is an excellent fish, of a pleasant taste, and spawns in April.
Walton's Angler.
- POPEDOM. [pope and dom.] Papacy; papal dignity.
That world of wealth I've drawn together
For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom. Shakep.
- POPEERY. n. f. [from pope.] The religion of the church of Rome.
Popery for corruptions in doctrine and discipline, I look upon to be the most absurd system of christianity. Swift.
- POPESEYE. n. f. [pope and eye.] The gland surrounded with fat in the middle of the thigh: why so called I know not.
- POPEGUN. n. f. [pop and gun.] A gun with which children play, that only makes a noise.
Life is not weak enough to be destroyed by this popgun artillery of tea and coffee. Cheyne.
- POPINJAY. [papegay, Dutch; papagayo, Spanish.]
1. A parrot.
Young popinjays learn quickly to speak. Asham.
The great red and blue parrot; there are of these greater, the middlemost called popinjays, and the lesser called perroquets. Grew's Museum.
2. A woodpecker. So it seems to be used here.
Terpichore would be expressed, upon her head a coronet of those green feathers of the popinjays, in token of that victory which the mules got of the daughters of Pierius, who were turned into popinjays or woodpeckers. Peacocks.
3. A trifling pop.
I, all smarting with my wounds, being gall'd
To be so pester'd by a popinjay, Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what. Shakep.
- POPISH. adj. [from pope.] Taught by the pope; relating to popery; peculiar to popery.
In this sense as they affirm, so we deny, that whatsoever is popish we ought to abrogate. Hooker.
I know thou art religious,
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies. Shakep.
- POPISHLY. adv. [from popish.] With tendency to popery; in a popish manner.
She baffled the many attempts of her enemies, and entirely broke the whole force of that party among her subjects, which was popishly affected. Addison's Freeholder.
A friend in Ireland, popishly speaking, I believe constantly well disposed towards me. Pope to Swift.
- POPULAR. n. f. [populier, Fr. populus, Lat.] A tree.
The leaves of the poplar are broad, and for the most part angular: the male trees produce amentaceous flowers, which have many little leaves and apices, but are barren: the female trees produce membranaceous pods, which open into two parts, containing many seeds, which have a large quantity of down adhering to them, and are collected into spikes. Miller.
Po is drawn with the face of an ox, with a garland of poplar upon his head. Peacocks on Drawing.
All he describ'd was present to their eyes,
And as he rais'd his verse, the poplars seem'd to rise. Ryfe.
So falls a poplar, that in watry ground Rais'd high the head. Pope's Iliad.
- POPPY. n. f. [poppy, Sax. papaver, Lat.] A plant.
The flower of the poppy, for the most part, consists of four leaves, placed orbicularly, and expanded in form of a rose, out of whose flower cup, consisting of two leaves, rises the point-al, which afterwards becomes a fruit or pod that is oval or oblong, and adorned with a little head, under which, in some species, is opened a series of holes quite round into the cavity of the fruit, which is defended lengthwise with various leaves or plates, to which a great number of very small seeds adhere: of these are eighteen species: some sort is cultivated for medicinal use; and some suppose it to be the plant whence opium is produced. Miller.

POP

- His temples last with poppies were o'erspread, That nodding seem'd to consecrate his head. Dryden.
Dr. Lifter has been guilty of mistake, in the reflections he makes on what he calls the sleeping Cupid with poppy in his hands. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- POPULACE. n. f. [populace, Fr. from populus, Lat.] The vulgar; the multitude.
Now swarms the populace, a countless throng,
Youth and hoar age tumultuous pour along. Pope.
The tribunes and people having subdued all competitors, began the last game of a prevalent populace, to chuse themselves a master. Swift.
- POPULACY. n. f. [populace, Fr.] The common people; the multitude.
Under colours of pious ambitious policies march, not only with security, but applause as to the populace. King Charles.
When he thinks one monarch's lust too mild a regiment, he can let in the whole populace of sin upon the soul. D. of Piety.
- POPULAR. adj. [populaire, Fr. popularis, Lat.]
1. Vulgar; plebeian.
I was sorry to hear with what partiality and poplar heat elections were carried in many places. King Charles.
The emmet join'd in her popular tribes
Of commonalty. Milton.
So the popular vote inclines. Milton.
2. Suitable to the common people.
Homilies are plain and popular instructions. Hooker.
3. Beloved by the people; pleasing to the people.
It might have been more popular and plausible to vulgar ears, if this first discourse had been spent in extolling the force of laws. Hooker, b. i.
- Such as were popular,
And well-deserving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.
The old general was set aside, and prince Rupert put into the command, which was no popular change. Clarendon.
4. Studious of the favour of the people.
A popular man is, in truth, no better than a prostitute to common fame and to the people. Dryden.
His virtues have undone his country;
Such popular humanity is treason. Addison's Cato.
5. Prevailing or raging among the populace: as, a popular distemper.
- POPULARITY. n. f. [popularitas, Lat. popularité, Fr. from popular.]
1. Graciousness among the people; state of being favoured by the people.
The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny. Bacon.
Your mind has been above the wretched affectation of popularity. Dryden.
- Admire we then,
Or popularity, or stars, or strings,
The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings. Pope.
He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which his flatterers might represent as popularity. Swift.
2. Representation suited to vulgar conception; what affects the vulgar.
The persuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by solid reasons, so it may be represented also by colours, popularities and circumstances, which sway the ordinary judgment. Bacon.
- POPULARLY. adv. [from popular.]
1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.
The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the salutations of the crowd. Dryden.
Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they poplar y kill. Dryden.
- Nor can we execute the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularly set forth the eminency thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- TO POPULATE. v. n. [from populus, people.] To breed people.
When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon's Essays.
- POPULATION. n. f. [from populate.] The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.
The population of a kingdom, especially if it be not mown down by wars, does not exceed the stock of the kingdom, which should maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned, only by number; for a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower, and gather more. Bacon.
- POPULOSITY. n. f. [from populus.] Populousness; multitude of people.
How it conduceth unto populosity, we shall make but little doubt; there are two main causes of numerosity in any species;
a frequent and multiparous way of breeding. Brown.

POR

- POPULOUS. adj. [populosus, Lat.] Full of people; numerously inhabited.
A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heavenly company. Shakep.
Far the greater part have kept Their station; heav'n yet populous, retains Number sufficient to possess her realms. Milton.
- POPULOUSLY. adv. [from populosus.] With much people.
- POPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from populosus.] The state of abounding with people.
This will be allowed by any that considers the vastness, the opulence, the populosusness of this region, with the ease and facility wherewith 'tis governed. Temple's Miscellanies.
- PORCELAIN. n. f. [porcelaine, Fr. said to be derived from por-cent anneé; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain was matured under ground one hundred years.]
1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glass, and therefore semi-pellucid.
We have burials in several earthen, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.
We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelain or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which lieth in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The fine materials made it weak;
Porcelain, by being pure, is apt to break. Dryden.
These look like the workmanship of heav'n:
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore cast into these noble molds. Dryden.
2. [Portulaca, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.
- PORCH. n. f. [porche, Fr. porticus, Lat.]
1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.
Ehud went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour. Judges iii. 23.
Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The sick, the old, that could but hope a day Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. Benj. Johnson.
2. A portico; a covered walk.
All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shakep.
- PORCUPINE. n. f. [porc epi or epic, Fr. porcospino, Italian.]
The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig: the quills, with which its whole body is covered, are black on the shoulders, thighs, sides and belly; on the back, hips and loins they are variegated with white and pale brown:
the neck is short and thick, the nose blunt, the nostrils very large in form of flits; the upper lip is slit or cleft as in the hare, and it has whiskers like a cat: the eyes are small, and the ears very like those of the human species: the legs are short, and on the hinder feet are five toes, but only four upon the fore feet, and its tail is four or five inches long, beset with spines in an annular series round it: there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill.
- This stubborn Cade
Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine. Shakespeare.
Long bearded comets, itick
Like flaming porcupines to their left sides,
As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.
By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glaring cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Ar. and Po.
- PORE. n. f. [pore, Fr. poré.]
1. Spiracle of the skin; passage of perspiration.
Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by ointments and anointing themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bac.
Why was the light
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd?
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore. Milton.
2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.
Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.
From veins of vallies milk and nectar broke,
And honey sweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.
- TO PORE. v. n. [pore, Fr. poré.] is the optick nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intenseness and care; to examine with great attention.
All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth, while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyefight. Shakep.

POR

A book was writ, called Tetrachordon,
The subject new: it walk'd the town a while,
Numb'ring good intellects; now seldom por'd on. Milton.
The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Let him with pedants hunt for praise in books,
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen,
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rowe.
With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.
He hath been poring so long upon Fox's Martyrs, that he imagines himself living in the reign of queen Mary. Swift.
The design is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to shew that they understand men and manners, and have not been poring upon old unfashionable books. Swift.
POREBLIND. adj. [commonly spoken and written purblind.]
Nearighted; shortighted.
Poreblind men see best in the dimmer light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not poreblind, and can read and write smaller letters; for that the spirits visual in those that are poreblind are thinner and rarer than in others, and therefore the greater light disperse them.
Bacon's Natural History.
PORINESS. n. f. [from por.] Fullness of pores.
I took off the dressings, and set the trepan above the fractured bone, considering the poriness of the bone below. Wifem.
PORISTICK method. n. f. [ποριστικός.] In mathematicks, is that which determines when, by what means, and how many different ways a problem may be solved. DiD.
PORK. n. f. [porc, Fr. porcus, Lat.] Swines flesh unsalted.
You are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting Jews to christians, you raise the price of pork.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
All flesh full of nourishment, as beef and pork, increaseth the matter of phlegm. Floyer on the Humours.
PORKER. n. f. [from pork.] A hog; a pig.
Strait to the lodgments of his herd he runs,
Where the fat porkers slept beneath the fun. Pope.
PORKREATER. n. f. [pork and eater.] One who feeds on pork.
This making of christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be porkers, we shall not shortly have a rather on the coals for money. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
PORKET. [from pork.] A young hog.
A priest appears
And off rings to the flaming altars bears;
A porket, and a lamb that never suffer'd shears. Dryden.
PORKLING. n. f. [from pork.] A young pig.
A hovel
Will serve thee in winter, moreover than that,
To shut up thy porklings, thou meanest to fat. Tupper.
POROSITY. n. f. [from porous.] Quality of having pores.
This is a good experiment for the disclosure of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer porosity, and which a grosser. Bacon's Natural History.
POROUS. adj. [porous, Fr. from pore.] Having small spiracles or passages.
The rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill Water'd the garden. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
Of light the greater part he took, and plac'd
In the sun's orb, made porous to receive And drink the liquid light; firm to retain Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light. Milton.
POROUSNESS. n. f. [from porous.] The quality of having pores.
They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having its thinnest parts pressed into it. Digby on Bodies.
PORPHYRE. n. f. [from πορφύρεα; porphyrites, Lat. porphyre,
Porphyry.] f. f. Marble of a particular kind.
I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper stone of the same. Peasam on Drawing.
Consider the red and white colours in porphyry; hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish, and produce no such ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again. Locke.
PORPOISE. n. f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The sea-hog.
PORPUS. n. f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The sea-hog.
Amphibious animals link the terrestrial and aquatick together; seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and entrails of a hog. Locke.
Parch'd with unextinguish'd thirst,
Small beer I guzzle till I burst;
And then I drag a bloated corpus Swell'd with a droply like a porpus. Swift.
PORPACIOUS. adj. [porraceus, Lat. porrace, Fr.] Greenish.
If the lesser intestines be wounded, he will be troubled with porraceous vomiting. Wifeman's Surgery.
PORRET. n. f. [porrum, Lat.] A scallion.
It is not an easy problem to resolve why garlick, molys

POR

and porrets have white roots, deep green leaves and black seeds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PORRIDGE. n. f. [more properly porrage; porrata, low Latin, from porrum, a leek.] Food made by boiling meat in water; broth.
I had as lief you should tell me of a mess of porridge. Sho.
PORRIDGEPOT. n. f. [porridge and pot.] The pot in which meat is boiled for a family.
PORRINGER. n. f. [from porridge.]
1. A vessel in which broth is eaten.
A small wax candle put in a socket of brass, then set upright in a porringer full of spirit of wine, then set both the candle and spirit of wine on fire, and you shall see the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwise, and appear globular. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
A physician undertakes a woman with sore eyes, who dawks 'em quite up with ointment, and, while she was in that pickle, carries off a porringer. L'Estrange.
The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glittering show,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.
2. It seems in Shakespeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a headrest; of which perhaps the first of these passages may show the reason.
Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.
—Why this was moulded on a porringer. Shakespeare.
A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
PORRECTION. n. f. [porrectio, Latin.] The act of reaching forth.
PORT. n. f. [port, Fr. portus, Latin.]
1. A harbour; a safe situation for ships.
Her small gondelay her port did make,
And that gay pair issuing on the shore,
Disburden'd her. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
I should be still Peering in maps for ports, and ways and roads. Shakespeare.
The earl of Newcastle seized upon that town; when there was not one port town in England, that avowed their obedience to the king. Clarendon, b. viii.
A weather beaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.
2. [Porta, Lat. porte, Sax. porte, Fr.] A gate.
Shew all thy praises within the ports of the daughter of Sion. Psalms ix. 14.
Descend, and open your uncharged ports. Shakespeare.
He I accuse,
The city ports by this hath entered. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
O polifid perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night; sleep with it now!
Yet not to found, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen bound,
Snores out the watch of night. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
The mind of man hath two ports; the one always frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities; the other devoted and overgrown with grafts, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations. Raleigh.
From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issu'd. Milton.
3. The aperture in a ship, at which the gun is put out.
At Portsmouth the Mary Rose, by a little way of the ship in casting about, her ports being within sixteen inches of the water, was overfet and lost. Raleigh.
The linlocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires,
The vig'rous seaman every port hole plies.
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.
4. [Portie, Fr.] Carriage; air; mien; manner; bearing;
external appearance; demeanour.
In that proud port, which her so goodly graceth,
Whiles her fair face she rears up to the sky,
And to the ground her cyclids low embraceth,
Most goodly temperate ye may descry. Spenser.
Think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentleman?
See Godfrey there in purple clad and gold,
His stately port and princely look behold. Fairfax.
Their port was more than human, as they flood;
I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live. Milton.
A proud man is so far from making himself great by his haughty and contemptuous port, that he is usually punished with neglect for it.
Now lay the line, and measure all thy court,
By inward virtue, not external port;
And find whom justly to prefer above
The man on whom my judgment plac'd my love. Dryden.
Thy plummy crest
Nods horrible, with more terrific port Thou walk'st, and seem'st already in the fight. Philips.

To PORT. v. a. [porto, Lat. porter, Fr.] To carry in form.
Th' angelick squadron bright
Turn'd fiery red, sharpening in mooned horns
Their phalanx, and began to hem him round
With ported spears. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
PORTABLE. adj. [portabilis, Lat.]
1. Manageable by the hand.
2. Such as may be born along with one.
The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming the eye or envy of the world. South.
3. Such as is transported or carried from one place to another.
Most other portable commodities decay quickly in their use; but money is by slower degrees removed from, or brought into the free commerce of any country, than the greatest part of other merchandize. Locke.
4. Sufferable; supportable.
How light and portable my pains seem now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
All these are portable Shakespeare, Macbeth.
With other graces weigh'd.
PORTABLENESS. n. f. [from portable.] The quality of being portable.
PORTAGE. n. f. [portage, Fr.]
1. The price of carriage.
2. [From port.] Porthole.
Lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brafs cannon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
PORTAL. n. f. [portail, Fr. po. tella, Italian.] A gate; the arch under which the gate opens.
King Richard doth appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun,
From out the fiery port of the east. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
Though I should run
To those disclosing portals of the sun;
And walk his way, until his horses sleep
Their fiery locks in the Iberian deep. Sandys.
He through heav'n
That open'd wide her blazing portals, led To God's eternal house direct the way. Milton.
The flick for air before the portal gasp. Dryden.
The portal consists of a composite order unknown to the ancients. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
PORTANCE. n. f. [from porter, Fr.] Air; mien; port; demeanour.
There stepped forth a goodly lady,
That seem'd to be a woman of great worth,
And by her stately portance born of heav'nly birth. F. Qu.
Your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,
Which gibingly, ungravelly, he did fashion. Shakespeare.
PORTASS. n. f. [Sometimes called portais, and by Chaucer porthofs.] A breviary; a prayer book.
In his hand his portesse still he bare,
That much was worn, but therein little red;
For of devotion he had little care. Fairy Queen.
An old priest always read in his portais mumpimus domine for mumpimus; whereof when he was admonished, he said that he now had used mumpimus thirty years, and would not leave his old mumpimus for their new mumpimus. Camden.
PORTCULLIS. n. f. [portecullisse, Fr. quasi porta clausa.] A PORTCLUSE. } sort of machine like a harrow, hung over the gates of a city, to be let down to keep out an enemy.
Over it a fair portcullis hung,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and compasture strong,
Neither unseemly short, nor yet exceeding long. F. Qu.
The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Hayward.
She the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herself, not all the Stygian pow'rs Cou'd once have mov'd. Milton.
Pyrrhus comes, neither men nor walls
His force sustain, the torn portcullis falls.
The upper eyelid claps down, and is as good a fence as a portcullis against the importunity of the enemy. More.
The gates are opened, the portcullis drawn;
And deluges of armies from the town
Come pouring in. Dryden.
To PORTCULLIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To bar; to shut up.
Within my mouth you have engag'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips. Shakespeare.
PORTED. adj. [porter, Fr.] Borne in a certain or regular order.
They hem him round with ported spears. Milton.
To PORTEND. v. a. [portendo, Lat.] To foretoken; to foreshow as omens.

POR

As many as remained, he earnestly exhorteth to prevent portended calamities. Hooker.
Doth this churlish superscription Portend some alteration in good will? Shakespeare.
A moist and a cool summer portendeth a hard winter. Bacon.
True opener of mine eyes,
Much better seems this vision, and more hope
Of peaceful days portends, than those two past. Milton.
True poets are the guardians of a state,
And when they fail, portend approaching fate. Roscommon.
The ruin of the state in the destruction of the church, is not only portended as its sign, but also inferred from it as its cause. South's Sermons.
PORTENSION. n. f. [from portend.] The act of foretoking.
Although the red comets do carry the portensions of Mars, the brightly white should be of the influence of Venus. Brown.
PORTENT. n. f. [portentum, Lat.] Omen of ill; prodigy foretoking misery.
O, what portents are these?
Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
My loss by dire portents the god foretold;
You riven oak, the fairest of the green. Dryden.
PORTENTOUS. adj. [portentosus, Lat. from portent.] Monstrous; prodigious; foretoking ill.
They are portentous things
Unto the climate, that they point at. Shakespeare.
This portentous figure
Comes armed through our watch to like the king
That was. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss. Milton.
No beast of more portentous size
In the Hercinian forest lies. Roscommon.
Let us look upon them as so many prodigious exceptions from our common nature, as so many portentous animals, like the strange unnatural productions of Africa. South.
Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick. Glanvil.
The petticoat will shrink at your first coming to town; at least a touch of your pen will make it contract itself, and by that means oblige several who are terrified or astonish'd at this portentous novelty. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 127.
PORTER. n. f. [portier, Fr. from porta, Lat. a gate.]
1. One that has the charge of the gate.
Porter, remember what I give in charge,
And, when you've so done, bring the keys to me. Shakespeare.
Arm all my household presently, and charge
The porter he let no man in till day. Benj. Johnson.
Nic. Frog demanded to be his porter, and his fishmonger, to keep the keys of his gates, and furnish the kitchen. Arb.
2. One who waits at the door to receive messengers.
A favourite porter with his master vie,
Be brib'd as often, and as often lie. Pope.
3. [Porteur, Fr. from porta, Lat. to carry.] One who carries burthens for hire.
It is with kings sometimes as with porters, whose packs may jostle one against the other, yet remain good friends still. Hawell.
By porter, who can tell, whether I mean a man who bears burthens, or a servant who waits at a gate? Watts.
PORTERAGE. n. f. [from porter.] Money paid for carriage.
PORTESSE. n. f. A breviary. See PORTASS.
PORTGLAVE. n. f. [porter and glave, Fr. and Erse.] A sword bearer. Ainsworth.
PORTGRAVE. } n. f. [porta, Lat. and grave, Teut. a keeper.]
PORTGREVE. } The keeper of a gate. Obsolete.
PORTICO. n. f. [porticus, Lat. portico, Italian; portique, Fr.]
A covered walk; a piazza.
The rich their wealth bestow
On some expensive airy portico;
Where safe from showers they may be born in state,
And free from tempests for fair weather wait. Dryden.
PORTION. n. f. [portion, Fr. portio, Latin.]
1. A part.
These are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him? Job xxvi. 14.
Like favour find the Irish, with like fate
Advanc'd to be a portion of our state. Waller.
In battles won, fortune a part did claim,
And soldiers have their portion in the fame. Waller.
Those great portions or fragments fell into the abyss; some in one posture, and some in another. Burnet.
Pirithous no small portion of the war
Press'd on, and took his lance, Dryden.
2. A part assigned; an allotment; a dividend.
Here their pris'n ordain'd and portion fet. Milton.
Shou'd you no honey vow to taste,
But what the master-bees have plac'd
In compass of their cells, how small
A portion to your share would fall? Waller.

Of words they seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless they are born with a poetical genius, which is a rare portion amongst them.

As soon as any good appears to make a part of their portion of happiness, they begin to desire it.

When he considers the manifold temptations of poverty and riches, and how fatally it will affect his happiness to be overcome by them, he will join with Agur in petitioning God for the safer portion of a moderate convenience.

One or two faults are easily to be remedied with a very small portion of abilities.

Part of an inheritance given to a child; a fortune.

Leave to thy children tumult, strife and war,

Portions of toil, and legacies of care.

A wife's fortune.

To PORTION. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide; to parcel.

The gods who portion out

The lots of princes as of private men,

Have put a bar between his hopes and empire.

Argos the feat of sovereign rule I chose,

Where my Ulysses and his race might reign,

And portion to his tribes the wide domain.

2. To endow with a fortune.

Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest,

The young who labour, and the old who rest.

PORTIONER. n. f. [from portion.] One that divides.

PORTLISS. n. f. [from portly.] Dignity of mien; grandeur of demeanour.

Such pride is praise, such portliness is honour,

That boldness innocence bears in her eyes;

And her fair countenance like a goodly banner

Spreads in defiance of all enemies.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, ful-ness with fineness, seemliness with portliness, and curtness with flayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness?

PORTLY. adj. [from port.]

1. Grand of mien.

Rudely thou wrong'dst my dear heart's desire,

In finding fault with her too portly pride.

Your Argosies with portly sail,

Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,

Or as it were the pageants of the sea,

Do overpeer the petty traffickers.

A portly prince, and goodly to the fight,

He seem'd a son of Anak for his height.

2. Bulky; swelling.

A goodly, portly man and a corpulent; of a cheerful look,

a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage.

Our house little deserves

The scourge of greatness to be used on it;

And that same greatness too, which our own hands

Have help'd to make so portly.

PORTMAN. n. f. [from port and man.] An inhabitant or burgess, as those of the cinque ports.

PORTMANTEAU. n. f. [from portemanteau. Fr.] A chest or bag in which cloaths are carried.

I desired him to carry one of my portmanteaus; but he laughed, and bid another do it.

PORTOISE. n. f. In sea language, a ship is said to ride a por- toise, when she rides with her yards struck down to the deck.

PORTRAIT. n. f. [from portrait. Fr.] A picture drawn after the life.

As this idea of perfection is of little use in portraits, or the resemblances of particular persons, so neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with some specks of frailty, such as they have been described in history.

The figure of his body was strong, proportionable, beautiful; and were his picture well drawn, it must deserve the praise given to the portraits of Raphael.

To PORTRAIT. v. a. [from portrait. Fr. from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and should be written in the following examples portray.

In most exquisite pictures, they blaze and portray not only the dainty lineaments or beauty, but also round about shadow the rude thickets and craggy cliffs.

I portray in Arthur before he was king, the image of a brave knight, perfected in the twelve private moral virtues.

Painted resemblance.

By the image of my cause I see

The portraiture of his.

Let some strange mysterious dream,

Wave at his wings in airy stream

Of lively portraiture display'd,

Softly on my eye-lids laid.

Herein was also the portraiture of a hart.

POS

This is the portraiture of our earth, drawn without flattery.

Her wry-mouth'd portraiture

Display'd the fates her confessions endure.

He delineates and gives us the portraiture of a perfect orator.

To PORTRAY. v. a. [from portray. Fr.]

1. To paint; to describe by picture.

The Earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen por- trayed in many places of their church steeple.

Take a tile, and so portray upon it the city Jerusalem. Ec.

Our Phenix queen was portrayed too bright,

Beauty alone could beauty take to right.

2. To adorn with pictures.

Various, with boastful argument portray'd.

PORTRESS. n. f. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate.

Janitrix.

The portress of hell-gate reply'd.

The shoes put on, our faithful portress

Admits us in to form the fortres;

While like a cat with walnuts shod,

Stumbling at ev'ry step she trod.

PORTWIGLE. n. f. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully shaped.

That black and round substance began to grow oval, after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernible, and at last to become that which the ancients called gyrinus, we a portwigle or tadpole.

PORTY. adj. [from portus. Fr. from port.] Full of pores.

To the court arriv'd th' admiring son

Beholds the vaulted roofs of porty stone.

To POSE. v. a. [from pose.] An old word signifying heaviness or stupefaction. zepele. Skinner.]

1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a stand or stop.

Learning was pos'd, philosophy was set,

Sophisters taken in a filier's net

How God's eternal son should be man's brother,

Poseth his proudest intellectual power.

As an evidence of human infirmities, I shall give the following instances of our intellectual blindness, not that I design to pose them with those common enigmas of magnetism.

Particularly in learning of languages, there is least occasion for posing of children.

2. To appose; to interrogate.

She in the presence of others pos'd him and sifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very duke of York or no.

POSER. n. f. [from pose.] One that asketh questions to try capacities; an examiner.

He that questioneth much, shall learn much; but let his questions not be troublesome, for that is fit for a poser.

POSTED. adj. [from positus. Lat.] It has the appearance of a participle preter, but it has no verb.] Placed; ranged.

That the principle that sets on work these organs is nothing else but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus posited or disposed, is most apparently false.

POSITION. n. f. [from positio. Fr. positio, Latin.]

1. State of being placed; situation.

Iron having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude till it attain the former position.

They are the happiest regions for fruits, by the excellence of soil, the position of mountains, and the frequency of floods.

Since no one sees all, and we have different prospects of the same thing, according to our different positions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that escaped him.

By varying the position of my eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the sun's light, the colour of the sun's reflected light constantly varied upon the speculum as it did upon my eye.

We have a different prospect of the same thing, according to the different position of our understandings toward it.

Place ourselves in such a position toward the object, or place the object in such a position toward our eye, as may give us the clearest representation of it; for a different position greatly alters the appearance of bodies.

2. Principle laid down.

Of any offence or sin therein committed against God, with what confidence can ye accuse us, when your own position are, that the things we observe should every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thousand lives.

Let not the proof of any positions depend on the position that follow, but always on those which go before.

3. Advancement of any principle.

A fallacious illation is to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or the remo-tion of the consequent to the remotion of the antecedent.

POS

4. [In grammar.] The state of a vowel placed before two consonants, as pampus; or a double consonant, as axile.

POSITIONAL. adj. [from position.] Respecting position.

The leaves of cataputia or spurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by-purge or vomit;

as old wives still do preach, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations.

POSITIVE. adj. [from positivus. Lat. positif, Fr.]

1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed; real; absolute.

The power or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good.

Hardness carries somewhat more of positive in it than im-penetrability, which is negative; and is perhaps more a consequence of solidity, than solidity itself.

Whatever doth or can exist, or be considered as one thing, is positive; and so not only simple ideas and substances, but modes also are positive beings, though the parts, of which they consist, are very often relative one to another.

2. Absolute; particular; direct; not implied.

As for positive words, that he would not bear arms against king Edward's son; though the words seem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title.

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions with confidence;

stubborn in opinion.

I am sometimes doubting, when I might be positive, and sometimes confident out of season.

Some positive persisting fops we know,

That, if once wrong, will needs be always so;

But you, with pleasure own your errors past,

And make each day a critic on the last.

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment.

In laws, that which is natural, bindeth universally, that which is positive, not so.

Although no laws but positive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be positive; positive laws are either permanent or else changeable, according as the matter itself is, concerning which they were made.

Laws are but positive; love's pow'r we see,

Is nature's sanction, and her first decree.

5. Having the power to enact any law.

Not to consent to the enacting of such a law, which has no view besides the general good, unless another law shall at the same time pass, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone; what is this but to claim a positive voice, as well as a negative.

6. Certain; assured.

POSITIVELY. adv. [from positive.]

1. Absolutely; by way of direct position.

Give me some breath, some little pause,

Before I positively speak in this.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be esteemed good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply.

2. Not negatively.

It is impossible that any successive duration should be actually and positively infinite, or have infinite successions already gone and past.

3. Certainly; without dubitation.

It was absolutely certain, that this part was positively yours, and could not possibly be written by any other.

4. Peremptorily; in strong terms.

I would ask any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not positively require humility and meekness to all men.

POSITIVENESS. n. f. [from positive.]

1. Actuality; not mere negation.

The positiveness of sins of commission lies both in the habi-tude of the will and in the executed act too; whereas the po-

sitiveness of sins of omission is in the habitude of the will only.

2. Peremptoriness; confidence.

This peremptor

POSSESSIVE. adj. [possessivus, Lat.] Having possession.

POSSESSORY. adj. [possessivus, Fr. from possesse.] Having possession.

POSSESSOR. n. s. [possessor, Lat. possessor, Fr.] Owner; master; proprietor.

Thou profoundest hell

Receive thy new possessor. Milton.

A considerable difference lies between the honour of men for natural and acquired excellencies and divine graces, that those having more of human nature in them, the honour doth more directly redound to the possessor of them. Stillington.

'Twas the interest of those, who thirsted after the possessions of the clergy, to represent the possessors in as vile colours as they could. Atterbury's Sermons.

POSSER. n. s. [posca, Lat.] Milk curdled with wine or any acid.

We'll have a posset at the latter end of a seacoal fire. Shak.

In came the bridemaids with the posset, Suckling.

The bridegroom eat in pight.

I allowed him medicated broths, posset ale and pearl julep. Wise's Surgery.

A sparing diet did her health assure;

Or sick, a pepper posset was her cure. Dryden.

The cure of the stone consists in vomiting with posset drink, in which althea roots are boiled. Floyer on the Humours.

Increase the milk when it is diminished by the too great use of flesh meats, by gruels and posset drink. Arbutnot.

POSSIBLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn; to curdle: as milk with acids. Not used.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through

The natural gates and allies of the body;

And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset

And curd, like eager droppings into milk,

The thin and wholesome blood. Shaksp. Hamlet.

POSSIBILITY. n. s. [possibilitas, Fr.] The power of being in any manner; the state of being possible.

There is no let, but that as often as those books are read, and need to requireth, the file of their differences may expressly be mentioned to bar even all possibility of error. Hooker.

Brother, speak with possibilities.

And do not break into these woeful extremes. Shaksp.

Consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities; and consequently could have nothing to recommend him to Christ's affection. South's Sermons.

A bare possibility, that a thing may be or not be, is no just cause of doubting whether a thing be or not. Tillotson.

According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

Example not only teaches us our duty, but convinces us of the possibility of our imitation. Rogers's Sermons.

POSSIBLE. adj. [possibile, Fr. possibilis, Lat.] Having the power to be or to be done; not contrary to the nature of things.

Admit all these impossibilities and great absurdities to be possible and convenient. Whitgift.

With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. Mat. xix. 26.

All things are possible to him that believeth. Mar. ix. 23.

Firm we submit, but possible to swerve. Milton.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles in men's minds in words of uncertain signification. Locke.

Set a pleasure tempting, and the hand of the Almighty visibly prepared to take vengeance, and tell whether it be possible for people wantonly to offend against the law. Locke.

POSSIBLY. adv. [from possible.]

1. By any power really existing.

Within the compass of which laws, we do not only comprehend whatsoever may be easily known to belong to the duty of all men, but even whatsoever may possibly be known to be of that quality. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

Can we possibly his love desert? Milton.

2. Perhaps; without absurdity.

Possibly he might be found in the hands of the earl of Essex, but he would be dead first. Clarendon, b. viii.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority circumscrib'd by laws. Addison.

POST. n. s. [poste, Fr. equus postis curior.]

1. A hasty messenger; a courier who comes and goes at stated times; commonly a letter carrier.

In certain places there be always fresh posts, to carry that farther which is brought unto them by the other. Abbot.

Three I'll rake up, the post unanointed

Of murtherous lechers. Shaksp. King Lear.

I fear my Julia would not deign my lines,

Receiving them by such a worthless post. Shaksp.

A cripple in the way out-travels a footman, or a post out of the way. Benj. Johnson's Discov.

I send you the fair copy of the poem on Dulness, which I should not care to hazard by the common post. Pope.

2. Perhaps; without absurdity.

Possibly he might be found in the hands of the earl of Essex, but he would be dead first. Clarendon, b. viii.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority circumscrib'd by laws. Addison.

2. Quick course or manner of travelling. This is the sense in which it is taken; but the expression seems elliptical to ride post, is to ride as a post, or to ride in the manner of a post; courir en poste; whence Shaksp., to ride in post.

I brought my master news of Juliet's death,

And then in post he came from Mantua

To this same monument. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

Sent from Media post to Egypt. Milton.

He who rides post through an unknown country, cannot distinguish the situation of places. Dryden.

3. [Poste, Fr. from positus, Lat.] Situation; seat.

The waters rise every where upon the surface of the earth; which new post, when they had once seized on, they would never quit. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. Military station.

See before the gate what stalking ghost

Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post. Dryd.

As I watch'd the gates,

Lodg'd on my post, a herald is arriv'd

From Cæsar's camp. Addison's Cato.

Whatever spirit careless of his charge

His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,

Shall feel sharp vengeance. Pope.

Each of the Grecian captains he represents conquering a single Trojan, while Diomed encounters two at once; and when they are engaged, each in his distinct post, he only is drawn fighting in every quarter. Pope.

5. Place; employment; office.

Every man has his post assigned to him, and in that station he is well, if he can but think himself so. L'Estrange.

False men are not to be taken into confidence, nor fearful men into a post that requires resolution. L'Estrange.

Without letters a man can never be qualified for any considerable post in the camp; for courage and corporal force, unless joined with conduct, the usual effects of contemplation, is no more fit to command than a tempest. Collier.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,

And from Britannia's publick posts retire,

Me into foreign realms my fate conveys. Addison.

Certain laws, by suff'ers thought unjust,

Deny'd all posts of profit or of trust. Pope.

Many thousands there are, who determine the justice or madness of national administrations, whom neither God nor men ever qualified for such a post of judgment. Watts.

6. [Postis, Lat.] A piece of timber set erect.

The blood they shall strike on the two side posts and upper post of the house. Ex. xii. 7.

Fir-trees, cyresses and cedars being, by a kind of natural rigour, inflexible downwards, are thereby fittest for posts or pillars. Wotton's Architecture.

Post is equivocal; it is a piece of timber, or a swift messenger.

POST. v. n. [poster, Fr. from the noun.] To travel with speed.

I posted day and night to meet you. Shaksp.

Will you presently take horse with him,

And with all speed post with him towards the North? Shak.

Post speedily to my lord, your husband,

Shew him this letter. Shaksp. King Lear.

Most wicked speed, to post

With such dexterity to incestuous sheets. Shaksp.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave, implore;

Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.

The Turkish messenger presently took horse, which was there in readiness for him, and posted towards Constantinople with as much speed as he could. Knutler.

Themistocles made Xerxes post apace out of Greece, by giving out that the Grecians had a purpose to break his bridge of ships athwart the Hellespont. Bacon's Essays.

Went thou of the golden-winged host,

Who having clad thyself in human weed,

To earth from thy prefixed seat didst post. Milton.

Thousands at his bidding speed,

And post o'er land and ocean without rest. Milton.

With songs and dance we celebrate the day;

At other times we reign by night alone, Dryden.

And passing through the skies pursue the moon.

No wonder that pastoralists are fallen into disesteem; I see the reader already uneasy at this part of Virgil, counting the pages, and posting to the Æneis. Walsh.

This only object of my real care,

In some few passing fatal hours is hurl'd

From wealth, from pow'r, from love and from the world. Prior.

He had not din'd;
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold; and then
We pour upon the mornings, are unapt
To give or to forgive. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
I would adviſe my gentle readers, as they conſult the good of their faces, to forbear frowning upon loyalſts, and pouring at the government. Addiſon's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup> 8.
The nurſe remained pouring, nor would the touch a bit during the whole dinner. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. To gape; to hang prominent.
The ends of the wound muſt come over one another, with a compreſs to preſs the lips equally down, which would otherwiſe become crude, and pour out with great lips. Wiſeman.
Satyrus was made up betwixt man and goat, with a human head, hooked noſe and pouring lips. Dryden.

POWDER. n. f. [poudre, Fr.]
1. Duſt; any body comminuted.

POW

2. [Pouder, Fr.] To sprinkle, as with dust.
Powder thy radiant hair,
Which if without such ashes thou would'st wear,
Thou who, to all which come to look upon,
Wert meant for Phoebus, would'st be Phaeton. Donne.
In the galaxy, that milky way
Which nightly, as a circling zone, thou see'st Powder'd with stars. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
The powder'd footman
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay.
3. To salt; to sprinkle with salt.
If you imbowl me to day, I'll give you leave to powder me and eat me to-morrow. Shakep. Henry IV.
Salting of oysters, and powdering of meat, keepeth them from putrefaction. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
My hair I never powder, but my chief Invention is to get me powder'd beef. Claaveland.
Immoderate feeding upon powder'd beef, pickled meats, anchovy, and debauching with brandy do inflame and acuate
the blood. Harvey on Consumptions.
To POWDER. v. n. To come tumultuously and violently. A low corrupt word.
Whist two companions were disputing it at sword's point, down comes a kite powdering upon them, and gobbets up both. L'Estrange.
POWDERBOX. n. f. [powder and box.] A box in which powder for the hair is kept.
There stands the toilette,
The patch, the powderbox, pulville, perfumes. Gay.

powder is kept for guns.
You may stick your candle in a bottle or a powderhorn. Steu.
POWDERMILL. n. f. [powder and mill.] The mill in which the ingredients for gunpowder are ground and mingled.
Upon the blowing up of a powdermill, the windows of adjacent houses are bent and blown outwards, by the elastic force of the air within exerting itself. Arbutnot.
POWDER-ROOM. n. f. [powder and room.] The part of a ship in which the gunpowder is kept.
The flame invades the powderrooms, and then
Their guns shoot bullets, and their vessels men. Waller.
POWDER-CHESTS. n. f. On board a ship, wooden triangular chests filled with gunpowder, pebble-stones and such like materials, set on fire when a ship is boarded by an enemy, which soon makes all clear before them. Dick.
POWDERING-TUB. n. f. [powder and tub.]
1. The vessel in which meat is salted.
When we view those large bodies of oxen, what can we better conceit them to be, than so many living and walking powdering-tubs, and that they have animam salis. More.
2. The place in which an infected lecher is phyicked to preserve him from putrefaction.
To the spital go,
And from the powdering-tub of infamy Fetch forth the lazar kite Doll Tearheart. Shakep.
POWDERY. adj. [poudreux, Fr. from powder.] Dusty; friable.
A brown powdery spar, which holds iron, is found amongst the iron ore. Woodward on Fossils.
POWER. n. f. [potens, Fr.]
1. Command; authority; dominion; influence.
If law, authority and pow'r deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio. Shakep.
No man could ever have a just power over the life of another, by right of property in land. Locke.
Power is no blessing in itself, but when it is employ'd to protect the innocent. Swift.
2. Influence; prevalence upon.
This man had power with him, to draw him forth to his death. Bacon's Essays.
Dejected! no, it never shall be said,
That fate had power upon a Spartan soul;
My mind on its own centre stands unmov'd
And stable, as the fabrick of the world. Dryden.
3. Ability; force; reach.
That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker.
I have suffer'd in your woe;
Nor shall be wanting ought within my pow'r,
For your relief in my refreshing bow'r. Dryden.
You are still living to enjoy the blessings of all the good you have performed, and many prayers that your power of doing generous actions may be as extended as your will. Dry.
It is not in the power of the most enlarged understanding, to invent one new simple idea in the mind, not taken in by the ways aforementioned. Locke.
'Tis not in the power of want or slavery to make them miserable. Addison's Guardian.
Though it be not in our power to make affliction no afflic-tion; yet it is in our power to take off the edge of it, by a steady view of those divine joys prepared for us in another state. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. Strength; motive force.
Observing in ourselves, that we can at pleasure move several parts of our bodies, which were at rest; the effects also that natural bodies are able to produce in one another, occurring every moment to our senses, we both these ways get the idea of power. Locke.
5. The moving force of an engine.
By understanding the true difference betwixt the weight and the power, a man may add such a fitting supplement to the strength of the power, that it shall move any conceivable weight, though it should never so much exceed that weight, which the power is naturally endowed with. Wilkins.
6. Animal strength; natural strength.
Care, not fear, or fear not for themselves altered something the countenances of the two lovers: but so as any man might perceive, was rather an assembling of powers than dismayedness of courage. Sidney, b. i.
He died of great years, but of strong health and powers. Bacon's Henry VII.
7. Faculty of the mind.
If ever
You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy,
Then you shall know the wounds invisible,
That love's keen arrows make. Shakep.
I was in the thought, they were not fairies, and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprize of my powers drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief. Shakep.
In our little world, this soul of ours
Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
Doth use, on divers objects, divers powers;
And so are her effects diversify'd. Davis.
Maintain the empire of the mind over the body, and keep the appetites of the one in due subjection to the reasoning powers of the other. Atterbury's Sermons.
The design of this science is to rescue our reasoning powers from their unhappy slavery and darkness. Watts.
8. Government; right of governing.
My labour
Honest and lawful, to deserve my food
Of those who have me in their civil power. Milton.
9. Sovereign; potentate.
'Tis surprising to consider with what heats these two powers have contested their title to the kingdom of Cyprus, that is in the hands of the Turk. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
10. One invested with dominion.
After the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Mat.
The fables turn'd some men to fow'rs,
And others did with brutish forms invest;
And did of others make celestial pow'rs,
Like angels, which still travel, yet still rest. Davis.
If there's a pow'r above us,
And that there is all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue. Addis.
11. Divinity.
Merciful powers!
Refrain in me the curst thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakepeare's Macbeth.
Cast down thyself, and only strive to raise
The glory of thy maker's sacred name;
Use all thy pow'rs, that blest pow'r to praise,
Which gives thee pow'r to be and use the same. Davis.
With indignation, thus he broke
His awful silence, and the pow'rs bespoke. Dryden.
Tell me,
What are the gods the better for this gold?
The wretch that offers from his wealthy store
These presents, bribes the pow'rs to give him more. Dryd.
12. Host; army; military force.
He, to work him the more mischief, sent over his brother Edward with a power of Scots and Redhanks into Ireland, where they got footing. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Never such a power,
For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land. Shakep. K. John.
Young Octavius and Mark Antony
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition tow'rd Philippi. Shakep.
Who leads his power?
Under whose government come they along?
My heart, dear Harry,
Threw many a northward look, to see his father
Bring up his pow'rs; but he did long in vain. Shakep.
Gazellus, upon the coming of the bassa, valiantly issued forth with all his power, and gave him battle. Kneller.
13. A large quantity; a great number. In low language: as, a power of good things.
POW'ERABLE. adj. [from power.] Capable of performing any thing.
That you may see how powerable time is in altering tongues,
I will set down the Lord's prayer as it was translated in sundry ages. Camden.
POW'ERFUL.

PRA

- PO'WERFUL. adj. [power and ful.]
1. Invested with command or authority; potent.
2. Forcible; mighty.
We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heaven's lord hath powerfully to send Against us from about his throne. Milton's Par. Lost.
Henry II. endeavouring to establish his grandfather's laws, met with powerful opposition from archbishop Becket. Ayliffe.
3. Efficacious.
PO'WERFULLY. adv. [from powerful.] Potently; mightily;
efficaciously; forcibly.
The sun and other powerfully lucid bodies dazzle our eyes.
By assuming a privilege belonging to riper years, to which a child must not aspire, you do but add new force to your example, and recommend the action more powerfully. Locke.
Before the revelation of the gospel, the wickedness and impunity of the heathen world was a much more excu-sable thing, because they had but very obscure apprehensions of those things which urge men most powerfully to forsake their sins. Tillotson's Sermons.
The grain-gold, upon all the golden coast of Guinea, is displayed by the rains falling there with incredible force, powerfully beating off the earth. Woodward.
PO'WERFULNESS. n. f. [from powerful.] Power; efficacy; might.
So much he stands upon the powerfulness of christian religion, that he makes it beyond all the rules of moral philosophy, strongly effectual to expel vice, and plant in men all kind of virtue. Hakewill on Providence.
PO'WERLESS. adj. [from power.] Weak; impotent.
I give you welcome with a pow'rless hand,
But with a heart full of unstained love. Shakep.
POX. n. f. [properly pocks, which originally signified a small bag or puffle; of the same original, perhaps, with poke or pouch. We still use pock, for a single puffle; pocay, Sax. pocken, Dutch.]
1. Pustules; efflorescences; exanthematous eruptions.
2. The venereal disease. This is the sense when it has no epithet.
I though brought to their ends by some other apparent disease, yet the pox hath been judged the foundation. Wiseham.
Wilt thou still sparkle in the box,
Still ogle in the ring?
Canst thou forget thy age and pox. Dorset.
POY. n. f. [appoy, Spanish; appoy, pois, Fr.] A ropedancer's pole.
To POZE. v. a. To puzzle. See POSE and APPOSE.
And say you so? then I shall poze you quickly. Shakep.
Of human infirmities I shall give instances, not that I design to poze them with those common enigmas of magnetism, fluxes and refluxes. Glarvill's Scops.
PRACTICABLE. adj. [practicable, Fr.]
1. Performable; feasible; capable to be practised.
This falls out for want of examining what is practicable and what not, and for want again of measuring our force and capacity with our design. L'Estrange.
An heroic poem should be more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us, than was done by the ancients. Dryden on Heroick Plays.
This is a practicable degree of christian magnanimity. Att.
Some physicians have thought, that if it were practicable to keep the humours of the body in an exact balance of each with its opposite, it might be immortal; but this is impossible in the practice. Swift.
2. Affailable; fit to be affailed.
PRACTICABLENESS. n. f. [from practicable.] Possibility to be performed.
PRACTICABLY. adv. [from practicable.] In such a manner as may be performed.
The meanest capacity, when he sees a rule practicably applied before his eyes, can no longer be at a loss how 'tis to be performed. Rogers.
PRACTICAL. adj. [practicus, Lat. pratique, Fr. from practice.]
Relating to action; not merely speculative.
The image of God was no less resplendent in man's practical understanding; namely, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South's Sermons.
Religion comprehends the knowledge of its principles, and a suitable life and practice; the first, being speculative, may be called knowledge; and the latter, because 'tis practical, wisdom. Tillotson's Sermons.
PRACTICALLY. adv. [from practical.]
1. In relation to action.
2. By practice; in real fact.
I honour her, having practically found her among the better fort of trees. Hovel's Vocal Forest.
PRACTICALNESS. n. f. [from practical.] The quality of being practical.
PRACTICE. n. f. [praxis, Gr.; pratique, Fr.]
1. The habit of doing any thing.

PRA

2. Use; customary use.
Obsolete words may be laudably revived, when they are more founding, or more significant than those in practice. Dry.
Of such a practice when Ulysses told;
Shall we, cries one, permit
This lewd romancer and his bantering wit. Tate.
3. Dexterity acquired by habit.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakep.
4. Actual performance, distinguished from theory.
There are two functions of the soul, contemplation and practice, according to that general division of objects, some of which only entertain our speculations, others also employ our actions; so the understanding, with relation to these, is divided into speculative and practical. South.
5. Method or art of doing any thing.
6. Medical treatment of diseases.
This disease is beyond my practice; yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep, who have died holily in their beds. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
7. Exercise of any profession.
8. [Fræ, Saxon, is cunning, siness, and thence prat, in Douglass, is a trick or fraud; latter times forgetting the original of words, applied to practice the fence of prat.] Wicked strata-gem; bad artifice. A fence not now in use.
He fought to have that by practice, which he could not by prayer; and being allowed to visit us, he used the opportunity of a fit time thus to deliver us. Sidney, b. ii.
Partly with suspicion of practice, the king was suddenly turned. Sidney, b. ii.
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand,
The practice and the purpose of the king. Shakep.
Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? this needs must be practice;
Who knew of your intent and coming hither? Shakep.
Wife flates prevent purposes
Before they come to practice, and foul practices
Before they grow to act. Denham's Sophy.
PRACTICK. adj. [praxikos; practicus, Lat. pratique, Fr.]
1. Relating to action; not merely theoretical.
When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences;
So that the act and practick part of life
Must be the mistress to this theorick. Shakep.
Whilst they contend for speculative truth, they, by mutual calumnies, forfeit the practick. Gov. of the Tongue.
True piety without cessation toils.
By theories, the practick part is lost. Denham.
2. In Spenser it seems to signify, fly; artful.
She used hath the practick pain
Of this false footman, cloaked with simpleness. F. Queen.
Thereto his subtle engines he doth bend,
His practick wit, and his fair filed tongue,
With thousand other sleights. Fairy Queen.
To PRACTISE. v. a. [praxidō; pratiquer, Fr.]
1. To do habitually.
Incline not my heart to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity. Psaln exli. 4.
2. To do; not merely to profess: as, to practise law or physic.
3. To use in order to habit and dexterity.
To PRACTISE. v. n.
1. To have a habit of acting in any manner formed.
Will truth return unto them that practise in her. Eachus.
They shall practise how to live secure. Milton.
Oft have we wonder'd
How such a ruling spirit you could restrain,
And practise first over yourself to reign. Waller.
2. To transact; to negotiate secretly.
I've practis'd with him,
And found a means to let the victor know,
That Syphax and Sempronius are his friends. Addison.
3. To try artifices.
Others by guilty artifice and arts,
Of promis'd kindness practise on our hearts;
With expectation blow the passion up,
She fans the fire without one gale of hope. Granvil.
4. To use bad arts or stratagems.
If you there
Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt Might be my question. Shakep. Ant. and Cleop.
If thou do'st him any slight disgrace, he will practise against thee by poison. Shakespeare's As You Like it.
5. To use medical methods.
I never thought I should try a new experiment, being little inclined to practise upon others, and as little that others should practise upon me. Temple's Mijcel.
6. To exercise any profession.
PRACTISANT. n. f. [from practise.] An agent.
Here enter'd Pucelle and her practisants. Shakep.

PRACTISER. n. f. [from practise.]

1. One that practises any thing; one that does any thing habitually.

We will, in the principles of the politician, shew how little efficacy they have to advance the practiser of them to the things they aspire to. South's Sermons.

2. One who prescribes medical treatment.

Sweet practiser, thy physick I will try,
That ministers thine own death if I die. Shakespeare.
I had reasoned myself into an opinion, that the use of physicians, unless in some acute disease, was a great venture, and that their greatest practisers practised least upon themselves. *Temple.*PRACTITIONER. n. f. [from practise.]1. He who is engaged in the actual exercise of any art. The author exhorts all gentlemen practitioners to exercise themselves in the transitory. *Arbutnot.*I do not know a more universal and unnecessary mistake among the clergy, but especially the younger practitioners. Sw.

2. One who uses any fly or dangerous arts.

There is some papistical practitioners among you. Whitgift.

3. One who does any thing habitually.

He must be first an exercised, thorough-paced practitioner of these vices himself. *South's Sermons.*PRÆCOGNITA. n. f. [Latin.] Things previously known in order to understanding something else; thus the structure of the human body is one of the præcognita of physick.Either all knowledge does not depend on certain præcognita or general maxims, called principles, or else these are principles. *Locke.*PRAGMA'TICK. adj. [πράγματικα; pragmaticque, Fr.]PRAGMA'TICAL. adj. [πράγματικα; pragmaticque, Fr.] meddling; impertinently busy; assuming business without leave or invitation.No sham so gross, but it will pass upon a weak man that is pragmatical and inquisitive. *L'Estrange.*Common estimation puts an ill character upon pragmatick meddling people. *Government of the Tongue.*He understands no more of his own affairs, than a child; he has got a sort of a pragmatical filly jade of a wife, that pretends to take him out of my hands. *Arbutnot.*The fellow grew so pragmatical, that he took upon him the government of my whole family. *Arbutnot.*Such a backwardness there was among good men to engage with an usurping people, and pragmatical ambitious orators. *Swift.*They are pragmatical enough to stand on the watch tower, but who assigned them the post? *Swift.*PRAGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from pragmatical.] Meddlingly; impertinently.PRAGMA'TICALNESS. n. f. [from pragmatical.] The quality of intermeddling without right or call.PRAISE. n. f. [πρίσις, Dutch.]1. Renown; commendation; fame; honour; celebrity. Best of fruits, whose taste has taught
The tongue, not made for speech, to speak thy praise. Milton.
Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease
In costly grots and marble palaces;
But to poor Bassus what avails a name,
To starve on compliments and empty fame. *Dryden.*2. Glorification; tribute of gratitude; laud. He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. *Psalms xl. 3. Milton.*3. Ground or reason of praise. To God glory and praise.
Praiseworthy actions are by thee embrac'd;
And 'tis my praise to make thy praises last. *Dryden.*To PRAISE. v. a. [πρίσις, Dutch.]1. To commend; to applaud; to celebrate. Will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass, and not praise
Rather your dauntless virtue. Milton.
We praise not Hector, though his name we know
Is great in arms; 'tis hard to praise a foe. *Dryden.*2. To glorify in worship. The shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen. *Luke ii. 20.*One generation shall praise thy works to another, and declare thy mighty works. *Psalms cxlv. 4.*Their touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd God and his works. *Milton.*PRAISEFUL. adj. [praise and full.] Laudable; commendable. Not now in use.Of whose high praise, and praiseful bliss, Goodness the pen, heaven the paper is.
He ordain'd a lady for his prize,
Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. *Chapman's Iliad.*PRAISER. n. f. [from praise.] One who praises; an applauder; a commender.We men and praisers of men should remember, that if we have such excellencies, it is reason to think them excellent creatures, of whom we are. Sidney.

Forgive me, if my verse but say you are A Sidney: but in that extend as far As loudest praisers. *B. Johnson's Epig.*Turn to God, who knows I think this true,
And useth oft, when such a heart mislays,
To make it good; for such a praiser prays. *Donne.*PRAISEWORTHY. adj. [praise and worthy.] Commendable; deserving praise.The Tritonian goddess having heard
Her blazed fame, which all the world had fill'd, Came down to prove the truth, and due reward
For her praiseworthy workmanship to yield. *Spenser.*Since men have left to do praiseworthy things,
Most think all praises flatteries; but truth brings
That found, and that authority with her name,
As to be rais'd by her is only fame. *Ben. Johnson.*Firmus, who seized upon Egypt, was so far praiseworthy, that he encouraged trade. *Arbutnot on Comm.*PRAME. n. f. A flat bottomed boat. To PRANCE. v. a. [pranken, Dutch, to set one's self to show.]1. To spring and bound in high mettle. Here's no fantastick mask, nor dance,
But of our kids that frisk and prance;
Nor wars are seen,
Unless upon the green,
Two harmless lambs are butting one the other. *Wotton.*With mud fill'd high, the rumbling cart draws near,
Now rule thy prancing steeds, lac'd charioteer. *Gay.*Far be the spirit of the chase from them,
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed. *Thomson.*2. To ride gallantly and ostentatiously. The horses hoofs were broken by means of the prancings, the prancings of their mighty ones. *Judges v. 22.*I see
Th' insulting tyrant, prancing o'er the field,
Strow'd with Rome's citizens, and drench'd in slaughter,
His horses hoofs wet with patrician blood. *Addison.*3. To move in a warlike or showy manner. We should neither have meat to eat, nor manufacture to cloathe us, unless we could prance about in coats of mail, or eat brass. *Swift.*To PRANK. v. a. [pranken, Dutch.] To decorate; to dress or adjust to ostentation.Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. *Fairy Queen.*In wine and meats she slow'd above the bank,
And in excess exceeded her own might,
In sumptuous tire the joy'd herself to prank,
But of her love too lavish. *Fairy Queen.*These are tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' th' common mouth: I despise them:
For they do prank them in authority
Against all noble sufferance. *Shakespeare.*Your high self,
The gracious mark o' th' land, you have obscur'd
With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like prank'd up. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.'Tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks, her mind attracts my soul. *Shakespeare.*I had not unlock'd my lips
In this unhallowed air, but that this jugler
Would think to charm my judgment as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules, prank in reason's garb. *Milton.*PRANK. n. f. A frolick; a wild flight; a ludicrous trick; a wicked act.Lay home to him;
Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear with. *Shakespeare.*Such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestif'rous and dissident pranks;
The very infants prattle of thy pride. *Shakespeare.*They caus'd the table to be covered and meat set on, which was no sooner set down, than in came the harpies, and played their accustomed pranks. *Raleigh.*They put on their cloaths, and played all those pranks you have taken notice of. *Addison's Guardian.*PRA'VE. n. f. [πράξις, Lat.] A leek; also a sea weed as green as a leek. *Bailey.*To PRATE. v. n. [praten, Dutch.] To talk carelessly and without weight; to chatter; to be loquacious; to prattle.His knowledge or skill is in prating too much. *Tulser.*Behold me, which owe
A moiety of the throne, here standing
To prate and talk for life and honour, fore
Who please to hear. *Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.*This starved justice hath prated to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbal-street; and every third word a lie. *Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.*After Flammoek and the blacksmith had, by joint and several pratings, found tokens of consent in the multitude, they offered themselves to lead them. *Bacon's Henry VII.*Oh listen with attentive light
To what my prating eyes indite! Cleveland.

O hear her prayer for them as now for us. *Shakespeare.*Were he as famous and as bold in war,
As he is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. *Shakespeare.*My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. *Romans x. 1.*Sighs now breath'd Inutterable, which the spirit of prayer
Inspir'd. *Milton.*No man can always have the same spiritual pleasure in his prayers; for the greatest saints have sometimes suffered the banishment of the heart, sometimes are fervent, sometimes they feel a barrenness of devotion; for this spirit comes and goes. *Taylor's Guide to Devotion.*2. Entreaty; submissive importunity. Prayer among men is supposed a means to change the person to whom we pray; but prayer to God doth not change him, but fits us to receive the things prayed for. *Stillington.*PRAYERBOOK. n. f. [prayer and book.] Book of publick or private devotions.Get a prayerbook in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descent. *Shakespeare.*I know not the names or number of the family which now reigns, farther than the prayerbook informs me. Swift.

PRE. [præ, Lat.] A particle which, prefixed to words derived from the Latin, marks priority of time or rank.

To PREACH. v. n. [predico, Lat. predicare, Fr.] To pronounce a publick discourse upon sacred subjects.From that time Jesus began to preach. *Mat. iv. 17.*Prophets preach of thee at Jerusalem. *Neh. vi. 7.*Divinity would not pass the yard and loom, the forge or anvil, nor preaching be taken in as an easier supplementary trade, by those that disliked the pains of their own. *D. of Pie.*As he was sent by his father, so were the apostles commissioned by him to preach to the gentile world. *D. of Pie.*The shape of our cathedral is not proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries. *Graunt.*To PREACH. *v. a.*1. To proclaim or publish in religious orations. The Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul. *Acts.*2. To inculcate publicly; to teach with earnestness. There is not any thing publicly notified, but we may properly say it is preached. *Hooker.*He oft to them preach'd Conversion and repentance. *Milton.*Can they preach up equality of birth,
And tell us how we all began from earth.
Huge heaps of slain;
A good old man while peace he preach'd in vain,
Amidst the madness of th' unruly train. *Dryden.*PREACH. n. f. [prediche, Fr. from the verb.] A discourse; a religious oration.This oversight occasioned the French spitefully to term religion in that sort exercised, a mere preach. Hooker.

PREACHER.

PRE

PREACHER. n. f. [præcheur, Fr. from preach.]
 1. One who discourses publicly upon religious subjects.
 The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers.
 You may hear the found of a preacher's voice, when you cannot distinguish what he saith.
 Here lies a truly honest man,
 One of those few that in this town Honour all preachers; hear their own. Crashaw.
 2. One who inculcates any thing with earnestness and vehemence.
 No preacher is listened to but time, which gives us the same train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before. Swift.
PREACHMENT. n. f. [from preach.] A sermon mentioned in contempt; a discourse affectingly solemn.
 Was't you, that revell'd in our parliament,
 And made a preachment of your high descent. Shakefp.
 All this is but a preachment upon the text at last. L'Estrange.
PREAMBLE. n. f. [preambule, Fr.] Something previous; introduction; preface.
 How were it possible that the church should any way else with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble, especially to common prayer. Hooker, b. v.
 Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gainfayed or crossed, no not in those very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.
 Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contentions with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wring out some petty contentments. Watson.
 This preamble to that history was not improper for this relation. Clarendon's Hist. of the Rebellion.
 With preamble sweet
 Of charming symphony they introduce
 Their sacred song, and waken raptures high. Milton.
 I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryden.
PREAMBULARY. adj. [from preamble.] Previous. Not in PREAMBULOUS. use.
 He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambularious unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth. Brown.
PREAPPREHENSION. n. f. [pre and apprehend.] An opinion formed before examination.
 A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, behold them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PREASE. n. f. Preis; crowd. Spenser. See PRESS.
 A ship into the sacred seas,
 New-built, now launch we; and from out our prease
 Chuse two and fifty youths. Chapman.
PREA'ING. part. adj. Crowding. Spenser.
PREBEND. n. f. [præbenda, low Latin; prebende, Fr.]
 1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches.
 His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St. Patrick's cathedral. Swift's Miscellanies.
 2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.
 Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of counsel with the bishop. Bacon.
PREBENDARY. n. f. [præbendarius, Lat.] A stipendiary of a cathedral.
 To lords, to principals, to prebendaries. Hubbard.
 I bequeath to the Reverend Mr. Grattan, prebendary of St. Audeon's, my gold bottle-screw. Swift's Last Will.
PRECA'RIOUS. adj. [precarious, Lat. precarius, Fr.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another; held by courtesy; changeable or alienable at the pleasure of another. No word is more unskillfully used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others: thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.
 What subjects will precarious kings regard,
 A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.
 Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannick power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addison.
 This little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Addison's Spectator.
 He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all these glories in the dust. Rogers's Sermons.
PRECA'RIOUSLY. n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.
 Our scene precariously subsists too long
 On French translation and Italian song.

PRE

Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,
 Be justly warm'd with your own native rage. Pope.
PRECA'RIOSNESS. n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.
 Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter, render the operation but little advisable. Sharp's Surgery.
PRECAUTION. n. f. precaution, Fr. [from precautus, Lat.] Preservative caution; preventive measures.
 Unless our ministers have strong assurances of his falling in with the grand alliance, or not opposing it, they cannot be too circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resolution. Addison on the State of the War.
 To PRECAUTION. v. a. [precautioner, Fr. from the noun.] To warn beforehand.
 By the disgraces, diseases and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned. Locke.
PRECEDA'NEOUS. adj. [This word is, I believe, mistaken by the author for precidaneous; precidaneous, Lat. cut or slain before. Nor is it used here in its proper sense.] previous; antecedent.
 That priority of particles of simple matter, influx of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and precedaneous, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 To PRECEDERE. v. a. [precedo, Lat. preceder, Fr.]
 1. To go before in order of time.
 How are we happy, still in fear of harm;
 But harm precedes not fin. Milton.
 Arius and Pelagius durst provoke,
 To what the centuries preceding spoke.
 The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.
 2. To go before according to the adjustment of ranks.
PRECEDENCE. n. f. [from precedo, Lat.]
PRECEDENCY. n. f. [from precedo, Lat.]
 1. The act or state of going before; priority.
 2. Something going before; something past.
 I do not like but yet; it does allay
 The good precedence. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.
 It is an epilogue or discourse, to make plain
 Some obscure precedence that hath before been said. Shakefp.
 3. Adjustment of place.
 The constable and marshal had cognizance, touching the rights of place and precedence. Hale.
 4. The foremost place in ceremony.
 None sure will claim in hell
Precedence; none, whose portion is small
 Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
 Will covet more. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedence. Havel.
 That person hardly will be found,
 With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd;
 Yet if another could precedence claim,
 My fixt desires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.
 5. Superiority.
 Books will furnish him, and give him light and precedency enough to go before a young follower. Locke.
 Being distracted with different desires, the next inquiry will be, which of them has the precedency, in determining the will, to the next action. Locke.
PRECEDENT. adj. [precedent, Fr. precedens, Lat.] Former; going before.
 Do it at once,
 Or thy precedent services are all
 But accidents unpurpos'd. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.
 Our own precedent passions do instruct us.
 What levity's in youth. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
 When you work by the imagination of another, it is necessary that he, by whom you work, have a precedent opinion of you, that you can do strange things. Bacon.
 Hippocrates, in his prognosticks, doth make good observations of the diseases that ensue upon the nature of the precedent four seasons of the year. Bacon.
 The world, or any part thereof, could not be precedent to the creation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 Truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves; herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. Saut.
PRECEDENT. n. f. [The adjective has the accent on the second syllable, the substantive on the first.] Any thing that is a rule or example to future times; any thing done before of the same kind.
 Examples for cases can but direct as precedents only. Hooker.
 Eleven hours I've spent to write it over, Shakespeare.
 The precedent was full as long a doing. A realtor.

PRE

A reason mighty, strong and effectual,
 A pattern, precedent and lively warrant
 For me, most wretched, to perform the like. Shakefp.
 No pow'r in Venice
 Can alter a decree established:
 'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
 And many an error, by the same example,
 Will rush into the state. Shakefp. Merch. of Venice.
 God, in the administration of his justice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of God towards other nations shall be conformable to his dealings with the people of Israel. Tillotson's Sermons.
 Such precedents are numberless; we draw
 Our right from custom; custom is a law. Granville.
PRECEDENTLY. adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.
PRECE'NTOR. n. f. [precentor, Lat. precentur, Fr.] He that leads the choir.
 Follow this precentor of ours, in blessing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to those enemies, which he died to give us power to resist and overcome. Hamm.
PRECEPT. n. f. [precepte, Fr. præceptum, Lat.] A rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a commandment; a direction.
 The custom of lessons furnishes the very simplest and rudest sort with infallible axioms and precepts of sacred truth, delivered even in the very letter of the law of God. Hooker.
 'Tis sufficient, that painting be acknowledged for an art; for it follows, that no arts are without their precepts. Dryden.
 A precept or commandment consists in, and has respect to, some moral point of doctrine, viz. such as concerns our manners, and our inward and outward good behaviour. Ayliffe.
PRECEPTIAL. adj. [from precept.] Consisting of precepts. A word not in use.
 Men
 Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief
 Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
 Their counsel turns to passion, which before
 Would give preceptual medicine to rage;
 Fetter strong madness in a silken thread,
 Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakefp.
PRECEPTIVE. adj. [preceptivus, Lat. from precept.] Containing precepts; giving precepts.
 The ritual, the preceptive, the prophetick and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Government of the Tongue.
 As the preceptive part enjoins the most exact virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which, in respect of the rewards, and the manner of proposing them, is adapted to the same end. Decay of Piety.
 The lesson given us here, is preceptive to us not to do any thing but upon due consideration. L'Estrange.
PRECEPTOR. n. f. [preceptor, Lat. preceptor, Fr.] A teacher; a tutor.
 Passionate chiding carries rough language with it, and the names that parents and preceptors give children, they will not be ashamed to bestow on others. Locke.
 It was to thee, great Stagyrite unknown,
 And thy preceptor of divine renown. Blackmore.
PRECESSION. n. f. [from precedo, præcessus, Lat.] The act of going before.
PRECINCT. n. f. [præcinctus, Latin.] Outward limit; boundary.
 The main body of the sea being one, yet within divers præcincts, hath divers names; so the catholic church is in like sort divided into a number of distinct societies. Hooker.
 Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way
 Not far off heav'n, in the præcincts of light, Directly towards the new-created world. Milton.
PRECIOUSITY. n. f. [from pretiosus, Lat.]
 1. Value; preciousness.
 2. Any thing of high price.
 The index or forefinger was too naked whereto to commit their preciosities, and hath the tuition of the thumb scarce unto the second joint. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Barbarians seem to exceed them in the curiosity of their application of these preciosities. More's Divine Dialogues.
PRECIOUS. adj. [pretiosus, Fr. pretiosus, Lat.]
 1. Valuable; being of great worth.
 Many things, which are most precious, are neglected only because the value of them lieth hid. Hooker.
 I cannot but remember such things were,
 That were most precious to me. Shakefp. Macbeth.
 Why in that raven's left you wife and children,
 Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
 Without leave taking? Shakefp. Macbeth.
 I never saw
 Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought
 But beggary and poor luck. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
 These virtues are the hidden beauties of a soul, which make it lovely and precious in his sight, from whom no secrets are concealed. Addison's Spectator.
 2. Costly; of great price: as, a precious stone.
 Let none admire
 That riches grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

PRE

3. Worthless. An epithet of contempt or irony.
 More of the same kind, concerning these precious saluts amongst the Turks, may be seen in Pietro della valle. Locke.
PRECIOUSLY. adv. [from precious.]
 1. Valuably; to a great price.
 2. Contemptibly. In irony.
PRECIOUSNESS. n. f. [from precious.] Valuableness; worth; price.
 Its preciousness equalled the price of pearls. Wilkins.
PRECIPICE. n. f. [præcipitium, Lat. precipice, Fr.] A headlong steep; a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.
 You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
 And woo your own destruction. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
 Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice; for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice. Bacon.
 I ere long that precipice must tread,
 Whence none return, that leads unto the dead. Sandys.
 No stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.
 Swift down the precipice of time it goes,
 And sinks in minutes, which in ages rofe. Dryden.
 His generous mind the fair ideas drew
 Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;
 Where wealth, like fruit, on precipices grew,
 Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey. Dryden.
 Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then show your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice. Swift.
PRECIPITANCE. n. f. [from precipitant.] Rash haste; head-
PRECIPITANCY. adj. long hurry.
 Thither they haste with glad precipitance. Milton.
 'Tis not likely that one of a thousand such precipitancies should be crowned with so unexpected an issue. Glanvill.
 As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, lost the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error. Glanvill's Scept.
 We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting rather the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or setting of stars. Brown.
 Hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, I took this opportunity to send a letter to the secretary. Gulliver's Travels.
 A rashness and precipitance of judgment, and hastiness to believe something on one side or the other, plunges us into many errors. Watts's Logic.
PRECIPITANT. adj. [precipitans, Lat.]
 1. Falling or rushing headlong.
 Without longer pause,
 Downright into the world's first region throws
 His flight precipitant. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
 The birds headless while they strain
 Their tuneful throats, the tow'ring heavy lead
 Overtakes their speed; they leave their little lives
 Above the clouds, precipitant to earth. Philips.
 2. Hasty; urged with violent haste.
 Should he return, that troop so blithe and bold,
Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight,
 And curse their cumbrous pride's unwieldy weight. Pope.
 3. Rashly hurried.
 The commotions in Ireland were so sudden and so violent, that it was hard to discern the rise, or apply a remedy to that precipitant rebellion. King Charles.
PRECIPITANTLY. adv. [from precipitant.] In headlong haste; in a tumultuous hurry.
 To PRECIPITATE. v. a. [præcipito, Lat. precipiter, Fr. in all the senses.]
 1. To throw headlong.
 She had a king to her son in law, yet was, upon dark and unknown reasons, precipitated and banished the world into a nunnery. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Ere vengeance
Precipitate thee with augmented pain. Milton.
 They were wont, upon a superstition, to precipitate a man from some high cliff into the sea, tying about him with strings many great fowls. Wilkins.
 The virgin from the ground
 Uptarting fresh, already clos'd the wound,
Precipitates her flight. Dryden.
 The goddess guides her son, and turns him from the light, Herself involv'd in clouds, precipitates her flight. Dryden.
 2. To hasten unexpectedly.
 Short, intermittent and swift recurrent pains do precipitate patients into consumptions. Harvey.
 3. To hurry blindly or rashly.
 As for having them obnoxious to ruin, if they be of fearful natures, it may do well; but if they be stout and daring, it may precipitate their designs, and prove dangerous. Bacon.
 Dear Erythraea, let not such blind fury
Precipitate your thoughts, nor set them working,
 Till time shall lend them better means,
 Than lost complaints. Denham's Sophy.
 3. To throw

PRE

3. To throw to the bottom. A term of chymistry opposed to sublime.

Gold endures a vehement fire long without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew's Cofmol.

To PRECIPITATE. v. n.

1. To fall headlong.
Had'st thou been aught but gossamer feathers,
So many fathom down precipitating, Thoud'st shiver like an egg. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. To fall to the bottom as a sediment.
By strong water every metal will precipitate. Bacon.

3. To hasten without just preparation.
Neither did the rebels spoil the country, neither on the other side did their forces encrease, which might hasten him to precipitate and assail them. Bacon.

PRECIPITATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Steeply falling.
Barcephas faith, it was necessary this paradise should be set at such a height, because the four rivers, had they not fallen so precipitate, could not have had sufficient force to thrust themselves under the great ocean. Raleigh.

- When the full stores their antient bounds disdain, Precipitate the furious torrent flows;
In vain would speed avoid, or strength oppose. Prior.

2. Headlong; hasty; rashly hasty.
The archbishop, too precipitate in pressing the reception of that which he thought a reformation, paid dearly for it. Clarendon.

3. Hasty; violent.
Mr. Gay died of a mortification of the bowels; it was the most precipitate case I ever knew, having cut him off in three days. Pope to Swift.

PRECIPITATE. n. f. A corrosive medicine made by precipitating mercury.

As the scar separated, I rubb'd the super-excrecence of flesh with the vitriol-stone, or sprinkled it with precipitate. Wifeman's Surgery.

PRECIPITATELY. adv. [from precipitate.]

1. Headlong; steeply down.
2. Hasty; in blind hurry.

It may happen to those who vent praise or censure too precipitately, as it did to an English poet, who celebrated a nobleman for erecting Dryden's monument, upon a promise which he forgot, till it was done by another. Swift.

Not so bold Arnall; with a weight of scull Furious he links, precipitately dull. Pope's Dunciad.

PRECIPITATION. n. f. [precipitation, Fr. from precipitate.]

1. The act of throwing headlong.
Let them pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down-stretch
Below the beam of fight, yet will I still Be this to them. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

2. Violent motion downward.
That could never happen from any other cause than the hurry, precipitation and rapid motion of the water, returning at the end of the deluge, towards the sea. Woodward.

3. Tumultuous hurry; blind haste.
Here is none of the hurry and precipitation, none of the blustering and violence, which must have attended those supposititious changes. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

4. In chemistry, Sublimity: contrary to sublimation.
Separation is wrought by precipitation or sublimation; that is, a calling of the parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

The precipitation of the vegetative matter, after the deluge, and the burying it in the strata underneath amongst the sand, was to retrench the luxury of the productions of the earth, which had been so ungratefully abused by its former inhabitants. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

PRECIPITOUS. adj. [precipites, Lat.]

1. Headlong; steep.
Monarchy, together with me, could not but be dashed in pieces by such a precipitous fall as they intended. K. Charles.

2. Hasty; sudden.
Though the attempts of some have been precipitous, and their enquiries so audacious as to have lost themselves in attempts above humanity, yet have the enquiries of most descended by the way. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

How precious the time 'is, how precipitous the occasion, how many things to be done in their just season, after once a ground is in order. Evelyn's Kalendar.

3. Rath; heady.
Thus fram'd for ill, he loos'd our triple hold,
Advice unsafe, precipitous and bold. Dryden.

PRECISE. adj. [precis, Fr. precisus, Lat.]

1. Exact; strict; nice; having strict and determinate limitations.
Means more durable to preserve the laws of God from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself. Hooker, b. i.

PRE

You'll not bear a letter for me; you stand upon your honour; why, thou unconfinable baleneis, it is as much as I can do to keep the term of mine honour precise. Shakesp.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land six weeks, and let it not trouble you if your occasions ask farther time; for the law in this point is not precise. Bacon.

Let us defend from this top

Of speculation; for the hour precise Exacts our parting. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xiii.

In human actions there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged. Taylor.

The reasonings must be precise, though the practice may admit of great latitude. Arbutnot on Aliments.

The precise difference between a compound and collective idea is this, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind, but a collective, things of the same kind. Watt.

2. Formal; finical; solemnly and superstitiously exact.
The raillery of the wits in king Charles the Second's reign, upon every thing which they called precise, was carried to so great an extravagance, that it almost put all Christianity out of countenance. Adisson.

PRECISELY. adv. [from precise.]

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.
Doth it follow, that all things in the church, from the greatest to the least, are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker, b. v.

When the Lord had once precisely set down a form of executing that wherein we are to serve him, the fault appeareth greater to do that which we are not, than not to do that which we are commanded. Hooker, b. ii.

He knows,
He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoubts present occasion,
His foes are so enrooted with his friends. Shakesp.

Where more of these orders than one shall be set in several stories, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Watson's Architecture.

In his tract my wary feet have slept,
His undeclined ways precisely kept. Sandys.

The rule, to find the age of the moon, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and of the moon. Haller.

Measuring the diameter of the fifth dark circle, I found it the fifth part of an inch precisely. Newton's Opticks.

2. With superstitious formality; with too much scrupulosity; with troublesome ceremony.

PRECISENESS. n. f. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.

I will distinguish the cases; though give me leave, in the handling of them, not to fever them with too much preciseness. Bacon.

When you have fixed proper hours for particular studies, keep to them, not with a superstitious preciseness, but with some good degrees of a regular constancy. Watt.

PRECISION. n. f. [from precise.] Exact limitation.

1. One who limits or restrains.
Though love use reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. One who is superstitiously rigorous.
A profane person calls a man of piety a precisian. Watt.

PRECISION. n. f. [precision, Fr.] Exact limitation.

He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular species of being; unless he can think of it with and without precision at the same time. Locke.

I have left out the utmost precisions of fractions in these computations as not necessary; these whole numbers shewing well enough the difference of the value of guineas. Locke.

I was unable to treat this part more in detail, without sacrificing perspicuity to ornament, without wandering from the precision or breaking the chain of reasoning. Pope.

PRECISIVE. adj. [from precisus, Lat.] Exactly limiting, by cutting off all that is not absolutely relative to the present purpose.

Precisive abstraction is when we consider those things apart, which cannot really exist apart; as when we consider modes, without considering its substance or subject. Watt.

To PRECLUDE. v. a. [præcludo, Lat.] To shut out or hinder by some anticipation.

This much will obviate and preclude the objections of our adversaries, that we do not determine the final cause of the systematical parts of the world, merely as they have respect to the exigencies or conveniences of life. Bentley.

If you once allow them such an acceptance of chance; you have precluded yourself from any more reasoning against them. Bentley's Sermons.

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely esteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECOCIOUS. adj. [præcocius, Lat. precoce, Fr.] Ripe before the time.

Many precocious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter, may be found in moist parts. Brown.

PRECOCITY.

PRE

PRECOCITY. n. f. [from precoceus.] Ripeness before the time.

Some impute the cause of his fall to a precocity of spirit and valour in him; and that therefore some infectious southern air did blast him. Howell's Vocal Forest.

To PRECOGITATE. v. a. [præcogito, Lat.] To consider or scheme beforehand.

PRECOGNITION. n. f. [præ and cognitio, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

PRECONCERT. n. f. [præ and conceit.] An opinion previously formed.

A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their misfashioned preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Hooker.

To PRECONCEIVE. v. a. [præ and conceive.] To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath preconceived it shorter than the truth; and the frustrations of that maketh it seem so. Bacon.

Fondness of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports suspect, nor for want of sagacity or care, defective. Glammill's Scyll.

The reason why men are so weak in governing is, because most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently. South's Sermons.

PRECONCEPTION. n. f. [præ and conception.] Opinion previously formed.

Custom with most men prevails more than truth, according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we shape the discourse of reason itself. Hakewill.

PRECONTRACT. n. f. [præ and contract.] This was formerly accented on the last syllable. A contract previous to another.

He is your husband on a precontract; To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin. Shakesp.

To PRECONTRACT. v. a. [præ and contract.] To contract or bargain beforehand.

Some are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be unmarried, because they are already precontracted to some other; or else are in too near a degree of affinity or consanguinity. Ayliffe.

PRECURSE. n. f. [from præcurro, Lat.] Forerunning.

The like præcurse of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated. Shakesp.

PRECURSOR. n. f. [præcursor, Lat. precursor, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.

Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not. Shakesp. Tempest.

This contagion might have been prefiged upon consideration of its precursor, viz. a rude winter, and a close, fulphurous and fiery air. Harvey on the Plague.

Thomas Burnet played the precursor to the coming of Homer in his Homerides. Pope.

PREDACEOUS. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Living by prey.

As those are endowed with poison, because they are predaceous; so these need it not, because their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without contest. Derham.

PREDAL. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practising plunder. This word is not countenanced from analogy.

Sarmatia, laid by predal rapine low,
Mourn'd the hard yoke, and sought relief in vain. Sa. Boyse.

PREDATORY. adj. [predatorius, Lat. from præda, Lat.]

1. Plundering; practising rapine.
The king called his parliament, where he exaggerated the malice and the cruel predatory war made by Scotland. Bacon.

2. Hungry; preying; rapacious; ravenous.
The evils that come of exercise are, that it maketh the spirits more hot and predatory. Bacon.

PREDCEASED. adj. [præ and decessed.] Dead before.

Will you mock at an ancient tradition, began upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour. Shakesp. Henry V.

PREDCESSOR. n. f. [predcessor, Fr. præ and decessus, Lat.]

1. One that was in any state or place before another.
In these pastoral pastimes, a great many days were spent to follow their flying predcessors. Sidney.

There is cause, why we should be slow and unwilling to change, without very urgent necessity, the ancient ordinances, rites and long approved customs of our venerable predcessors. Hooker.

If I seem partial to my predcessor in the laurel, the friends of antiquity are not few. Dryden.

The present pope, who is well acquainted with the secret history, and the weakness of his predcessor, seems resolved to bring the project to its perfection. Adisson.

The more beauteous Close sat to thee,
Good Howard, emulous of Apelles' art;
But happy thou from Cupid's arrow free,
And flames that pierc'd thy predcessor's heart. Prior.

2. Ancestors.

PREDESTINARIAN. n. f. [from predestinate.] One that holds the doctrine of predestination.

Why does the predestinarian so adventurously climb into heaven, to ransack the celestial archives, read God's hidden decrees, when with less labour he may secure an authentic transcript within himself. Decay of Piety.

To PREDESTINATE. v. a. [predestinare, Fr. præ and destinare, Lat.] To appoint beforehand by irreversible decree.

Some gentleman or other shall scape a predestinate scratcht face. Shakesp.

Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conform'd to the image of his son. Romans viii. 29.

Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself. Eph. i. 5.

To PREDESTINATE. v. n. To hold predestination. In ludicrous language.

His ruff crest he rears,
And pricks up his predestinating ears. Dryden.

PREDESTINATION. n. f. [predestination, Fr. from predestinate.] Fatal decree; pre-ordination.

Predestination we can difference no otherwise from providence and prescience, than this, that prescience only foreseeth, providence foreseeth and careth for, and hath respect to all creatures, and predestination is only of men; and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their salvation properly in the common use of divines; or perdition, as some have used it. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Nor can they justly accuse
Their maker, or their making, or their fate;
As if predestination over-ru'd
Their will, dispos'd by absolute decree,
Or high fore-knowledge. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.

PREDDESTINATOR. n. f. [from predestinate.] One that holds predestination or the prevalence of pre-established necessity.

Me, mine example let the Stoicks use,
Their sad and cruel doctrine to maintain;
Let all predestinators me produce,
Who struggle with eternal fate in vain. Cowley.

To PREDESTINE. v. a. [præ and destine.] To decree beforehand.

Ye careful angels, whom eternal fate
Ordains on earth and human ads to wait,
Who turn with secret pow'r this restless ball,
And bid predestin'd empires rise and fall. Prior.

PREDETERMINATION. n. f. [predetermination, Fr. præ and determination.] Determination made beforehand.

This predetermination of God's own will is so far from being the determining of ours, that it is distinctly the contrary; for supposing God to predetermine that I shall act freely; 'tis certain from thence, that my will is free in respect of God, and not predetermined. Hammond's Fundamentals.

To PREDETERMINE. v. a. [præ and determine.] To doom or confine by previous decree.

We see in brutes certain sensible instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the sensible life. Hale.

PREDIAL. [predium, Lat.] Consisting of farms.

By the civil law, their predial estates are liable to fiscal payments and taxes, as not being appropriated for the service of divine worship, but for profane uses. Ayliffe.

PREDICABLE. adj. [predicabilis, Fr. predicabilis, Lat.] Such as may be affirmed of something.

PREDICABLE. n. f. [predicabile, Lat.] A logical term, denoting one of the five things which can be affirmed of any thing.

These they call the five predicables; because every thing that is affirmed concerning any being, must be the genus, species, difference, some property or accident. Watts.

PREDICAMENT. n. f. [predicament, Fr. predicamentum, Lat.]

1. A class or arrangement of beings or substances ranked according to their natures: called also categorema or category. Harris.

If there were nothing but bodies to be ranked by them in the predicament of place, then that description would be allowed by them as sufficient. Digby on Bodies.

2. Class or kind described by any definitive marks.
The offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice;
In which predicament I say thou stand'st. Shakesp.

I shew the line and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this subtle king. Shakesp.

PREDICAMENTAL. adj. [from predicament.] Relating to predicaments.

PREDICANT. n. f. [predicans, Lat.] One that affirms any thing.

To PREDICATE. v. a. [predico, Lat.] To affirm any thing of another thing.

All propositions, wherein a part of the complex idea, which any term stands for, is predicated of that term, are only verbal; v. g. to say that gold is a metal. Locke.

To PREDICATE.

PRE

To PREDICATE. v. n. To affirm or speak.

It were a presumption to think, that any thing in any created nature can bear any perfect resemblance of the incomprehensible perfection of the divine nature, very being itself not predicating univocally touching him and any created being.

PREDICATE. n. f. [prædicatum, Lat.] That which is affirmed of the subject; as man is rational.

The predicate is that which is affirmed or denied of the subject.

PREDICATION. n. f. [prædicatio, Lat. from predicate.] Affirmation concerning any thing.

Let us reason from them as well as we can; they are only about identical predication and influence.

To PREDICT. v. a. [prædictus, Lat. predire, Fr.] To foretell; to foreshow.

He is always inveighing against such unequal distributions; nor does he ever cease to predict public ruins, till his private are repaired.

PREDICTION. n. f. [prædictio, Lat. prediction, Fr. from predict.] Prophecy; declaration of something future.

These predictions are to the world in general, as to Caesar.

The predictions of cold and long winters, hot and dry summers, are good to be known.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!

Measur'd this transient world the race of time, Till time stand fix'd.

In Christ they all meet with an invincible evidence, as if they were not predictions, but after-relations; and the penmen of them not prophets but evangelists.

He, who prophesied the best, Approves the judgment to the rest;

He'd rather choose, that I should die, Than his prediction prove a lie.

PREDICTOR. n. f. [from predict.] Foreteller.

Whether he has not been the cause of this poor man's death, as well as the predictor, may be disputed.

PREDIGESTION. n. f. [præ and digestio.] Digestion too soon performed.

Predigestion, or hasty digestion, fills the body full of crudities and seeds of diseases.

To PREDISPOSE. v. a. [præ and dispo.] To adapt previously to any certain purpose.

Vegetable productions require heat of the sun, to dispose and excite the earth and the seeds.

Unless nature be disposed to friendship by its own propensity, no arts of obligation shall be able to abate the secret hatreds of some persons towards others.

PREDISPOSITION. n. f. [præ and dispositio.] Previous adaptation to any certain purpose.

It was conceived to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the dispositions of seasons.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; so as it is no marvel if they alter the spirits, considering that tunes have a disposition to the motion of the spirits.

External accidents are often the occasional cause of the king's evil; but they suppose a disposition of the body.

PREDOMINANCE. n. f. [præ and domina, Lat.] Prevalence; PREDOMINANCY. n. f. [superiority; ascendancy; superior influence.

We make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon and the stars, as if we were knaves, thieves and treacherous by spherical predominance.

An inflammation consists only of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm or choler.

In human bodies, there is an incessant warfare amongst the humours for predominancy.

The true cause of the Pharisees disbelief of Christ's doctrine, was the predominance of their covetousness and ambition over their will.

The several rays therefore in that white light do retain their colorific qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do, by their excess and predominance, cause their proper colour to appear.

PREDOMINANT. adj. [predominant, Fr. præ and dominor.] Prevalent; supreme in influence; ascendent.

Miserable were the condition of that church, the weighty affairs whereof should be ordered by choice deliberations, wherein such an humour as this were predominant.

Foul subornation is predominant, And equity exil'd your highness' land.

It is a planet, that will strike Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powerful.

Those helps were overweighed by divers things that made against him, and were predominant in the king's mind.

PRE

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n, Rise on the earth; or earth rise on the sun.

I could shew you several pieces, where the beauties of this kind are so predominant, that you could never be able to read or understand them.

To PREDOMINATE. v. n. [predominare, Fr. præ and dominor, Lat.] To prevail; to be ascendent; to be supreme in influence.

So much did love t' her executed lord Predominate in this fair lady's heart.

The gods formed womens souls out of these principles which compose several kinds of animals; and their good or bad disposition arises, according as such and such principles predominate in their constitutions.

The rays, reflected least obliquely, may predominate over the rest, so much as to cause a heap of such particles to appear very intensely of their colour.

Where judgment is at a loss to determine the choice of a lady who has several lovers, fancy may the more allowably predominate.

To PREELECT. v. a. [præ and elect.] To chuse by previous decree.

PREEMINENCE. n. f. [preeminence, Fr. præ and eminence.] It is sometimes written, to avoid the junction of ee, preeminence.

1. Superiority of excellence.

I plead for the preeminence of epick poetry.

Let profit have the preeminence of honour in the end of poetry; pleasure, though but the second in degree, is the first in favour.

The preeminence of christianity to any other religious scheme which preceded it, appears from this, that the most eminent among the Pagan philosophers disclaimed many of those superfluous follies which are condemned by revealed religion.

2. Precedence; priority of place.

His lance brought him captives to the triumph of Artelia's beauty, such, as though Artelia be amongst the fairest, yet in that company were to have the preeminence.

He toucheth it as a special preeminence of Junias and Andronicus, that in christianity they were his ancients.

I do invest you jointly with my power, Preeminence, and all the large effects

That troop with majesty.

The English desired no preeminence, but offered equality both in liberty and privilege, and in capacity of offices and employments.

Am I distinguish'd from you but by toils, Superior toils, and heavier weight of cares!

Painful preeminence.

3. Superiority of power or influence.

That which standeth on record, hath preeminence above that which passeth from hand to hand, and hath no pens but the tongues, no book but the ears of men.

Beyond the equator, the Southern point of the needle is sovereign, and the North submits his preeminence.

PREEMINENT. adj. [preminent, Fr. præ and eminent.] Excellent above others.

Tell how came I here? by some great maker In goodness and in pow'r preminent.

We claim a proper interest above others, in the preminent rights of the household of faith.

PREEPTION. n. f. [præemptio, Lat.] The right of purchasing before another.

Certain persons, in the reigns of king Edward VI. and queen Mary, fought to make use of this preemption, but crossed in the prosecution, or defeated in their expectation, gave it over.

To PREENGAGE. v. a. [præ and engage.] To engage by precedent ties or contracts.

The world has the unhappy advantage of preengaging our passions, at a time when we have not reflection enough to look beyond the instrument to the hand whose direction it obeys.

To Cipeus by his friends his suit he mov'd, But he was preengag'd by former ties.

Not only made an instrument; But preengaged without my own consent.

PREENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from preengage.] Precedent obligation.

My preengagements to other themes were not unknown to those for whom I was to write.

The opinions, suited to their respective tempers, will make way to their assent, in spite of accidental preengagements.

Men are apt to think, that those obediences they pay to God shall, like a preengagement, disannull all after-contracts made by guilt.

As far as opportunity and former preengagements will give leave.

PRE

To PREEN. v. a. [prænen, Dutch, to dress or prank up.] To trim the feathers of birds, to enable them to glide more easily through the air: for this use nature has furnished them with two peculiar glands, which secrete an unctuous matter into a perforated oil bag, out of which the bird, on occasion, draws it with its bill.

To PREESTABLISH. v. a. [præ and establish.] To settle beforehand.

PREESTABLISHMENT. n. f. [from preestablish.] Settlement beforehand.

To PREEXIST. v. a. [præ and existo, Lat.] To exist beforehand.

If thy preexisting soul Was form'd at first with myriads more, It did through all the mighty poets roll.

PREEXISTENCE. n. f. [preexistence, Fr. from preexist.] Existence beforehand; existence of the soul before its union with the body.

Wisdom declares her antiquity and preexistence to all the works of this earth.

As Simonides has exposed the vicious part of women, from the doctrine of preexistence; some of the ancient philosophers have satyrized the vicious part of the human species, from a notion of the soul's postexistence.

PREEXISTENT. adj. [preexistent, Fr. præ and existent.] Existing beforehand; preceding in existence.

Artificial things could not be from eternity, because they suppose man, by whose art they were made, preexistent to them; the workman must be before the work.

Blind to former, as to future fate, What mortal knows his preexistent state?

If this preexistent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, then some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God.

PREFACE. n. f. [præface, Fr. præfatio, Lat.] Something spoken introductory to the main design; introduction; something preomial.

This superficial tale Is but a preface to her worthy praise.

Sir Thomas More betrayed his depth of judgment in state affairs in his Utopia, than which, in the opinion of Budæus in a preface before it, our age hath not seen a thing more deep.

Heav'n's high behest no preface needs; Sufficient that thy prayers are heard, and death Defeated of his seizure.

To PREFACE. v. n. [præfari, Lat.] To say something introductory.

Before I enter upon the particular parts of her character, it is necessary to preface, that she is the only child of a decrepit father.

To PREFACE. v. a. [from preface.] To introduce by something preomial.

Thou art rash, And must be prefac'd into government.

To face; to cover. A ludicrous sense.

I love to wear cloaths that are fluff, Not prefacing old rags with plush.

PREFACER. n. f. [from preface.] The writer of a preface.

If there be not a tolerable line in all these six, the prefacer gave me no occasion to write better.

PREFATORY. adj. [from preface.] Introductory.

If this proposition, whoever will be saved, be restrained only to those to whom it was intended, the christians, then the anathema reaches not the heathens, who had never heard of Christ: after all, I am far from blaming even that prefatory addition to the creed.

PREFECT. n. f. [præfectus, Lat.] Governor; commander.

The better foldier, having been a tribune, Prefect, lieutenant, prætor in the war.

It was the custom in the Roman empire, for the prefects and vice-roys of distant provinces to transmit a relation of every thing remarkable in their administration.

PREFECTURE. n. f. [præfectura, Fr. præfectura, Lat.] Command; office of government.

To PREFER. v. a. [preferer, Fr. prefero, Lat.]

1. To regard more than another.

With brotherly love, in honour prefer one another.

2. With above before the thing postponed.

If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.

3. With before.

He that cometh after me, is preferred before me; for he was before me.

It may worthily seem unto you a most shameful thing, to have preferred an infamous peace before a most just war.

O spirit, that dost prefer Before all temples th' upright heart.

4. With to.

Would he rather leave this frantick scene, And trees and beasts prefer to courts and men.

5. To advance; to exalt; to raise.

By the recommendation of the earl of Dunbar, he was prefer'd to the bishoprick of Coventry and Litchfield.

He spake, and to her hand prefer'd the bowl.

6. To offer solemnly; to propose publicly; to exhibit.

They flatly disavouch To yield him more obedience or support;

And as t' a perjurd duke of Lancaster, Their cartel of defiance they prefer.

I, when my soul began to faint, My vows and prayers to thee prefer'd;

The lord my passionate complaint, Even from his holy temple, heard.

Prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and if that won't do, challenge the crown and the two houses.

Take care, Left thou prefer so rash a pray'r;

Nor vainly hope the queen of love Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve.

Every person within the church or commonwealth may prefer an accusation, that the delinquent may suffer condign punishment.

PREFERABLE. adj. [preferable, Fr. from prefer.] Eligible before something else. With to commonly before the thing refused.

The stronger ties we have to an unalterable pursuit of happiness, which is greatest good, the more are we free from any necessary compliance with our desire, set upon any particular, and then appearing preferable good, till we have duly examined it.

Though it be incumbent on parents to provide for their children, yet this debt to their children does not quite cancel the score due to their parents; but only is made by nature preferable to it.

Almost every man in our nation is a politician, and hath a scheme of his own, which he thinks preferable to that of any other.

Even in such a state as this, the pleasures of virtue would be superior to those of vice, and justly preferable.

PREFERABLENESS. adj. [from preferable.] The state of being preferable.

PREFERABLY. adv. [from preferable.] In preference; in such a manner as to prefer one thing to another.

How came he to chuse a comick preferably to the tragick poets; or how comes he to chuse Plautus preferably to Terence.

PREFERENCE. n. f. [preferentia, Fr. from prefer.]

1. The act of preferring; estimation of one thing above another; election of one rather than another.

It gives as much due to good works, as is consistent with the grace of the gospel; it gives as much preference to divine grace, as is consistent with the precepts of the gospel.

Leave the critics on either side, to contend about the preference due to this or that sort of poetry.

We find in ourselves a power to begin or forbear several actions of our minds and motions of our bodies, barely by a thought or preference of the mind, ordering the doing, or not doing such a particular action.

The several musical instruments in the hands of the Apollo's, Muses and Fauns, might give light to the dispute for preference between the ancient and modern musick.

A secret pleasure touch'd Athena's soul To see the preference due to sacred age Regarded.

2. With to before the thing postponed.

This passes with his soft admirers, and gives him the preference to Virgil.

It directs one, in preference to, or with neglect of the other, and thereby either the continuation or change becomes voluntary.

3. With above.

I shall give an account of some of those appropriate and discriminating notices wherein the human body differs, and hath preference above the most perfect brutal nature.

4. With before.

Hercin is evident the visible discrimination between the human nature, and its preference before it.

5. With over.

The knowledge of things alone gives a value to our reasonings, and preference to one man's knowledge over another.

PREFERMENT. n. f. [from prefer.]

1. Advancement to a higher station.

I'll move the king To any shape of thy preferment, such As thou'lt desire.

If you hear of that blind traitor, Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.

Princes must, by a vigorous exercise of that law, make it every man's interest and honour to cultivate religion and virtue, by rendering vice a disgrace, and the certain ruin to pre-ferment or pretensions. Swift.

2. A place of honour or profit. L'Estrange.

3. Preference; act of preferring. Not in use.

All which declare a natural preference of the one unto the motion before the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREFERRER. [from prefer.] One who prefers.

TO PREFIGURATE. v. a. [præ and figuro, Lat.] To shew by an antecedent representation.

PREFIGURATION. n. f. [from præfigurate.] Antecedent representation.

The same providence that hath wrought the one, will work the other; the former being pledges, as well as præfigurations of the latter. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The variety of prophecies and præfigurations had their punctual accomplishment in the author of this institution. Norris.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præ and figuro, Lat.] To exhibit by antecedent representation.

What the Old Testament hath, the very same the New containeth; but that which lieth there, as under a shadow, is here brought forth into the open sun; and things there præfigured, are here performed. Hooker.

Such piety, so chaste use of God's day, That what we turn to feast, the turn'd to pray, And did præfigure here in devout taste, The rest of her high sabbath, which shall last. Donne.

If shame superadded to loss, and both met together, as the sinners portion here, perfectly præfiguring the two saddest ingredients in hell, deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face, cannot prove efficacious to the mortifying of vice, the church doth give over the patient. Hammond.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præfigur, Fr. præfigur, Lat.] To limit beforehand.

He, in his immoderate desires, præfigured unto himself three years, which the great monarchs of Rome could not perform in so many hundreds. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

TO PREFIX. v. a. [præfixo, Lat.]

1. To appoint beforehand.

At the præfix'd hour of her awaking,

Came I to take her from her kindred's vault. Shakefp.

A time præfix, and think of me at last! Sandys.

Its inundation constantly increaseth the seventh day of June; wherein a larger form of speech were safer, than that which punctually præfixeth a constant day. Brown.

Booth's forward valour only serv'd to show,

He durst that duty pay we all did owe:

Th' attempt was fair; but heav'n's præfix'd hour

Not come. Dryden.

2. To settle; to establish.

Because I would præfix some certain boundary between them, the old statutes end with king Edward II. the new or later statutes begin with king Edward III. Hale's Law of England.

These boundaries of species are as men, and not as nature makes them, if there are in nature any such præfix'd bounds. Locke.

3. To put before another thing; as, he præfix'd an advertisement to his book. Locke.

PREFIX. n. f. [præfixum, Lat.] Some particle put before a word, to vary its signification.

In the Hebrew language the noun has its præfixa and affixa, the former to signify some few relations, and the latter to denote the pronouns possessive and relative. Clarke.

It is a præfix of augmentation to many words in that language. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREFIXION. n. f. [præfixion, Fr. from præfix.] The act of prefixing. Diët.

TO PREFORM. v. a. [præ and form.] To form beforehand.

If you consider the true cause,

Why all these things change, from their ordinance,

Their natures and præform'd faculties,

To monstrous quality; why you shall find,

That heav'n made them instruments of fear

Unto some monstrous state. Shakefp. Julius Cæsar.

PREGNANCY. n. f. [from pregnant.]

1. The state of being with young.

The breast is encompassed with ribs, and the belly left free, for respiration; and in females, for that extraordinary extension in the time of their pregnancy. Ray on the Creation.

2. Fertility; fruitfulness; inventive power; acuteness.

Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings. Shakefpere's Henry IV.

This writer, out of the pregnancy of his invention, hath found out an old way of insinuating the grossest reflections under the appearance of admonitions. Swift's Miscel.

PREGNANT. adj. [pregnant, Fr. pregnans, Lat.]

1. Teeming; breeding.

Thou

Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,

And mad'st it pregnant. Milton.

His town, as fame reports, was built of old

By Danae, pregnant with almighty gold. Dryden.

PRE

Through either ocean, foolish man!
That pregnant word sent forth again,
Might to a world extend each atom there,
For every drop call forth a sea, a heav'n for ev'ry star. Pri.

2. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating.

All these in their pregnant causes mixt; Milton.

Call the floods from high, to rush amain

With pregnant streams, to swell the teeming grain. Dryden.

3. Full of consequence.

These knew not the just motives and pregnant grounds, with which I thought myself furnished. King Charles.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

O detestable, passive obedience! did I ever imagine I should become thy votary in so pregnant an instance. Arb.

4. Evident; plain; clear; full. An obsolete sense.

This granted, as it is a most pregnant and unforc'd position, who stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as Caesar?

a knave very voluble. Shakefp. Othello.

Were't not that we stand up against them all,

'Twere pregnant, they should square between themselves. Shakefp. Antony and Cleopatra.

5. Easy to produce any thing.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,

Who by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to good pity. Shakefp. King Lear.

6. Free; kind. Obsolete.

My matter hath no voice, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear. Shakefpere.

PREGNANTLY. adv. [from pregnant.]

1. Fruitfully.

A thousand moral paintings I can shew,

That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune

More pregnantly than words. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.

The dignity of this office among the Jews is so pregnantly set forth in holy writ, that it is unquestionable; kings and priests are mentioned together. South's Sermon.

PREGUSTATION. n. f. [præ and gusto, Lat.] The act of tasting before another.

TO PREJUDGE. v. a. [præjuge, Fr. præ and judicio, Lat.] To determine any question beforehand; generally to condemn beforehand.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemn'd in parliament, and præjudg'd in the common opinion of the realm, and that it tended to the disinherison of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

The child was strong and able, though born in the eighth month, which the physicians do præjudge. Bacon.

The committee of council hath præjudg'd the whole case, by calling the united sense of both houses of parliament an universal clamour. Swift.

Some action ought to be entered, lest a greater cause should be injured and præjudg'd thereby. Ayliffe.

TO PREJUDICATE. v. a. [præ and judicio, Lat.] To determine beforehand to disadvantage.

Our dearest friend

Præjudicates the business, and would seem

To have us make denial. Shakefpere.

Are you, in favour of his person, bent

Thus to præjudicate the innocent? Sandys.

PREJUDICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by prejudice; formed before examination.

This rule of casting away all our former præjudicate opinions, is not propoed to any of us to be practis'd at once as subjects or christians, but merely as philosophers. Watts.

2. Prejudiced; prepossessed.

Their works will be embraced by most that understand them, and their reasons enforce belief from præjudicate

readers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREJUDICATION. n. f. [from præjudicate.] The act of judging beforehand.

PREJUDICE. n. f. [præjudice, Fr. præjudicium, Lat.]

1. Prepossession; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is used for prepossession in favour of any thing or against it. It is sometimes used with to before that which the præjudice is against, but not properly.

The king himself frequently considered more the person who spoke, as he was in his præjudice, than the counsel itself that was given. Clovenston, b. viii.

My comfort is, that their manifest præjudice to my cause will render their judgment of less authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable præjudice to projectors of all kinds, for which reason, when I talk of practising to fly, filly people think me an owl for my pains. Addison.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt; injury. This sense is only accidental or consequential; a bad thing being called a præjudice, only because præjudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not de-derived from the original or etymology of the word: it were therefore better to use it less; perhaps præjudice ought never to be applied to any mischief, which does not imply some partiality or prepossession. In some of the following examples its impropriety will be discovered. I have

PRE

I have not spake one the least word,
That might be præjudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

England and France might, through their amity,

Breed him some præjudice; for from this league

Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

Factions carried too high and too violently, is a sign of weakness in princes, and much to the præjudice of their authority and business. Bacon.

How plain this abuse is, and what præjudice it does to the understanding of the sacred scriptures. Locke.

A prince of this character will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any præjudice. Addison.

TO PREJUDICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prepossess with unexamined opinions; to fill with pre- judices.

Half-pillars wanted their expected height,

And roofs imperfect præjudic'd the sight. Prior.

Suffer not any beloved study to præjudice your mind, so far as to despise all other learning. Watts.

No flames to captivate the mind he spreads,

Nor bribes your eyes to præjudice your heads. Anonym.

2. To obstruct or injure by prejudices previously raised.

Companies of learned men, be they never so great and reverend, are to yield unto reason; the weight whereof is no whit præjudic'd by the simplicity of his person, which doth allege it. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

Neither must his example, done without the book, præju- dice that which is well appointed in the book. Whitefield.

I am not to præjudice the cause of my fellow-poets, though

I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure; to hurt; to diminish; to impair; to be detrimental to. This sense, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original sense; who can read with patience of an ingredient that præ- judices a medicine?

The strength of that law is such, that no particular nation can lawfully præjudice the same by any their several laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private resolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.

The Danube refus'd, and the empire sav'd,

Say, is the majesty of verse retriev'd?

And would it præjudice thy softer vein,

To sing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vinous bitter, warmer in the composition of its ingredients than the watry infusion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of so grateful a flavour, the only care required in this composition was to chuse such an addition as might not præjudice it. London Dispensatory.

PREJUDICIAL. adj. [præjudicial, Fr. from præjudice.]

1. Obstructive by means of opposite prepossessions.

2. Contrary; opposite.

What one syllable is there, in all this, præjudicial any way to that which we hold? Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.

3. Mischievous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This sense is improper. See PRÆJUDICE, noun and verb.

His going away the next morning with all his troops, was most præjudicial and most ruinous to the king's affairs. Claren.

One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; so that the learning of the family is not at all præju- dicial to its manufactures. Addison's Guardian.

A state of great prosperity, as it exposes us to various temptations, so it is often præjudicial to us, in that it swells

the mind with undue thoughts. Atterbury's Sermons.

PREJUDICIALNESS. n. f. [from præjudicial.] The state of being præjudicial; mischievousness.

PRÆLACY. n. f. [from prælate.]

1. The dignity or post of a prelate

PRE

Verse is not the effect of sudden thought; but this hinders not, that sudden thought may be represented in verse, since those thoughts must be higher than nature can raise without premeditation. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

PREMICES. n. f. [primitivæ, Lat. premites, Fr.] First fruits.

A charger, yearly filled with fruits, was offered to the gods at their festivals, as the premites or first gatherings. Dry.

PREMIER. adj. [French.] First; chief.

The Spaniard challengeth the premier place, in regard of his dominions. Camden's Remains.

Thus families like realms, with equal fate,
Are sunk by premier ministers of state. Swift.

To PREMISE. v. a. [præmissus, Lat.]

1. To explain previously; to lay down premises.

The apostle's discourse here is an answer upon a ground taken; he premiseth, and then infers. Burnet.

I premise these particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungrateful task. Addison.

2. To send before the time. Not in use.

O let the vile world end,
And the premier flames of the last day
Knit earth and heav'n together! Shakesp. Henry VI.

To PREMERIT. v. a. [præmerere, Lat.] To deserve before.

They did not forgive Sir John Hotham, who had so much premerited of them. King Charles.

PREMISES. n. f. [præmissa, Lat. premisses, Fr.]

1. Propositions antecedently supposed or proved.

They infer upon the premises, that as great difference as commodiously may be, there should be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people. Hooker, b. iv. f. 7.

This is so regular an inference, that whilst the premises stand firm, it is impossible to shake the conclusion. Decay of Piety.

She study'd well the point, and found
Her foes conclusions were not found,
From premises erroneous brought,
And therefore the deduction's nought. Swift's Miscel.

2. In low language, houses or lands; as, I was upon the premises.

PREMISS. n. f. [præmissum, Lat.] Antecedent proposition.

This word is rare in the singular.

They know the major or minor, which is implied, when you pronounce the other premiss and the conclusion. Watts.

PREMIUM. n. f. [præmium, Lat.] Something given to invite a loan or a bargain.

No body cares to make loans upon a new project; whereas men never fail to bring in their money upon a land-tax, when the premium or interest allowed them is suited to the hazard they run. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup> 23.

People were tempted to lend, by great premiums and large interest; and it concerned them to preserve that government, which they had trusted with their money. Swift's Miscel.

To PREMONISH. v. a. [præmonere, Lat.] To warn or admonish beforehand.

PREMONISHMENT. n. f. [from premonish.] Previous information.

After these premonishments, I will come to the comparison itself. Watson's Architecture.

PREMONITION. n. f. [from premonish.] Previous notice; previous intelligence.

What friendly premonitions have been spent
On your forbearance, and their vain event. Chapman.

How great the force of such an erroneous persuasion is, we may collect from our Saviour's premonition to his disciples, when he tells them, that those who killed them should think they did God service. Decay of Piety.

PREMONITORY. n. f. [from præ and monere, Lat.] Previously advising.

To PREMONSTRATE. v. a. [præ and monstro, Lat.] To show beforehand.

PREMUNTURE. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A writ in the common law, whereby a penalty is incurable, as infringing some statute.

Premunire is now grown a good word in our English laws, by tract of time; and yet at first it was merely mistaken for a premonere. Bramhall against Hobbs.

Woolley incurred a premunire, forfeited his honour, estate and life, which he ended in great calamity. South.

2. The penalty so incurred.

3. A difficulty; a distress. A low ungrammatical word.

PREMUNITION. n. f. [from præmunio, Lat.] An anticipation of objection.

To PREMUNIMATE. v. a. [præmunio, Lat.] To forename.

He you would found,
Having ever seen, in the premunimate crimes,
The youth, you breathe of, guilty. Shakesp. Hamlet.

PRENOMINATION. n. f. [præ and nominatio, Lat.] The privilege of being named first.

The watry productions should have the prenomination; and they of the land rather derive their names, than nominate those of the sea. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PRENOTION. n. f. [prænotio, Fr. præ and notio, Lat.] Foreknowledge; prescience.

PRE

The hedgehog's pretension of winds is so exact, that it floppeth the north or southern hole of its nest, according unto pretension of these winds ensuing. Brown.

PRENTICE. n. f. [contracted, by colloquial licence, from apprentice.] One bound to a master, in order to instruction in a trade.

My accuser is my prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me. Shakesp. Henry VI.

PRENTICESHIP. n. f. [from prentice.] The servitude of an apprentice.

He serv'd a prenticeship, who sets up shop,
Ward try'd on puppies, and the poor his drop. Pope.

PRENUNCIATION. n. f. [prænuncio, Lat.] The act of telling before.

PREOCCUPANCY. n. f. [from preoccupare.] The act of taking possession before another.

To PREOCCUPATE. v. a. [preoccupare, Fr. præoccupo, Lat.]

1. To anticipate.

Honour aspireth to death; grief flieth to it; and fear preoccupieth it. Bacon.

2. To prepossess; to fill with prejudices.

That the model be plain without colours, left the eye preoccupate the judgment. Watson's Architecture.

PREOCCUPATION. n. f. [from preoccupare.] The act of taking possession before another.

1. Anticipation.

2. Prepossession.

3. Anticipation of objection.

As if, by way of preoccupation, he should have said; well, here you see your commission, this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for evasions from worldly afflictions; this is your reward, if you perform it; this is your doom, if you decline it. South's Sermons.

To PREOCCUPY. v. a. To prepossess; to occupy by anticipation or prejudices.

I think it more respectful to the reader to leave something to reflections, than preoccupy his judgment. Arbutnot.

To PREOMINATE. v. a. [præ and ominare, Lat.] To prognosticate; to gather from omens any future event.

Because many ravens were seen when Alexander entered Babylon, they were thought to preminate his death. Brown.

PREOPINION. n. f. [præ and opinio, Lat.] Opinion antecedently formed; prepossession.

Diet holds no solid rule of selection; some, in indistinct voracity, eating almost any; others, out of a timorous preopinion, refraining from very many things. Brown.

To PREORDAIN. v. a. [præ and ordinare.] To ordain beforehand.

Sin is the contrariety to the will of God, and if all things be preordained by God, and so demonstrated to be willed by him, it remains there is no such thing as sin. Hammond.

Few souls preordain'd by fate,
The race of gods have reach'd that env'y'd state. Roscom.

PREORDINANCE. n. f. [præ and ordinance.] Antecedent decree; first decree. Not in use.

These lowly courtesies
Might stir the blood of ordinary men,
And turn preordination and first decree
Into the law of children. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

PREORDINATION. n. f. [from preordain.] The act of preordaining.

PREPARATION. n. f. [preparatio, Lat. preparation, Fr. from prepare.]

1. The act of preparing or previously fitting any thing to any purpose.

Nothing hath proved more fatal to that due preparation for another life, than our unhappy mistake of the nature and end of this. Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Previous measures.

I will shew what preparations there were in nature for this great dissolution, and after what manner it came to pass. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Ceremonious introduction.

I make bold to press, with so little preparation, upon you. — You're welcome. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. The act of making or fitting by a regular process.

In the preparations of cookery, the most volatile parts of vegetables are destroyed. Arbutnot on Aliments.

5. Any thing made by process of operation.

I with the chymists had been more sparing, who magnify their preparations, inveigle the curiosity of many, and delude the security of most. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

6. Accomplishment; qualification. Out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, authentic in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike and learned preparations. Shakesp.

PREPARATIVE. adj. [preparativus, Fr. from prepare.] Having the power of preparing or qualifying.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work. South's Sermons.

PRE

PREPARATIVE. n. f. [preparativus, Fr. from prepare.]

1. That which has the power of preparing or previously fitting.

They tell us the profit of reading is singular, in that it serveth for a preparative unto sermons. Hooker.

My book of advancement of learning may be some preparative or key for the better opening of the insaturation. Bacon.

Resolvedness in sin can, with no reason, be imagined a preparative to remission. Decay of Piety.

2. That which is done in order to something else.

The miteries, which have ensued, may be yet, through thy mercy, preparatives to us of future blessings. K. Charles.

Such a temper is a contradiction to repentance, as being founded in the destruction of those qualities, which are the only dispositions and preparatives to it. South's Sermons.

What avails it to make all the necessary preparatives for our voyage, if we do not actually begin the journey. Dryden.

PREPARATIVELY. adv. [from preparative.] Previously; by way of preparation.

It is preparatively necessary to many useful things in this life, as to make a man a good physician. Hale.

PREPARATORY. adj. [preparatoire, Fr.]

1. Antecedently necessary.

The practice of all these is proper to our condition in this world, and preparatory to our happiness in the next. Tillotson.

2. Introductory; previous; antecedent.

Preparatory, limited and formal interrogatories in writing preclude this way of occasional interrogatories. Hale.

Rains were but preparatory, the violence of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet.

To PREPARE. v. a. [præparo, Lat. preparare, Fr.]

1. To fit for any thing; to adjust to any use; to make ready for any purpose.

Patient Octavia, plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

Confound the peace establish'd, and prepare
Their souls to hatred, and their hands to war. Dryden.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomday wander in the shades of night. Dryden.

The beams of light had been in vain display'd,
Had not the eye been fit for vision made;
In vain the author had the eye prepar'd
With so much skill, had not the light appear'd. Blackmore.

2. To qualify for any purpose.

Some preachers, being prepared only upon two or three points of doctrine, run the same round. Addison.

3. To make ready beforehand.

There he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation. Psalms civ. 36.

Now prepare thee for another fight.
He took the golden compasses, prepar'd
In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
This universe. Milton.

4. To form; to make.

The woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God to feed her. Rev. xii. 6.

He hath founded it upon the seas, and prepared it upon the floods. Psalms xxiv. 2.

5. To make by regular process: as, he prepared a medicine.

To PREPARE. v. n.

1. To take previous measures.

Efficacy is a power of speech, which represents to our minds the lively ideas of things so truly, as if we saw them with our eyes; as Dido preparing to kill herself. Peacocks.

2. To make every thing ready; to put things in order.

Go in, sirrah, bid them prepare for dinner. Shakesp.

The long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing. 1 Peter iii. 2.

3. To make one's self ready; to put himself in a state of expectation.

PREPARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Preparation; previous measures. Not in use.

In our behalf
Go levy men, and make prepare for war. Shakesp.

PREPAREDLY. adv. [from prepared.] By proper precedent measures.

She preparedly may frame herself
To th' way she's forc'd to. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

To PREPONDERATE. v. a. [from preponderare.] To outweigh.

Though pillars by channelling be seemingly ingroined to our sight, yet they are truly weakened; and therefore ought not to be the more slender, but the more corpulent, unless appearances preponder truths. Watson's Architecture.

PRE

PREPONDERANCE. n. f. [from preponderare.] The state of

PREPONDERANCY. n. f. [from preponderare.] The state of

As to addition of ponderosity in dead bodies, comparing them unto blocks, this occasional preponderancy is rather an appearance than reality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The mind should examine all the grounds of probability, and, upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive proportionably to the preponderancy of the greater grounds of probability. Locke.

Little light boats were the ships which people used, to the sides whereof this fifth remora fastening, might make it swag, as the least preponderance on either side will do, and so retard its course. Grew's Musæum.

To PREPONDERATE. v. a. [præponderare, Lat.]

1. To outweigh; to overpower by weight.

An inconsiderable weight, by distance from the centre of the balance, will preponderate greater magnitudes. Glanvill.

The triviallest thing, when a passion is cast into the scale with it, preponderates substantial blessings. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. To overpower by stronger influence.

To PREPONDERATE. v. n.

1. To exceed in weight.

He that would make the lighter scale preponderate, will not so soon do it, by adding increas of new weight to the emptier, as if he took out of the heavier, what he adds to the lighter. Locke.

Unless the very mathematical center of gravity of every system be placed and fixed in the very mathematical center of the attractive power of all the rest, they cannot be evenly attracted on all sides, but must preponderate some way or other. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To exceed in influence or power analogous to weight.

In matters of probability, we cannot be sure that we have all particulars before us, and that there is no evidence behind, which may outweigh all that at present seems to preponderate with us. Locke.

By putting every argument on one side and the other into the balance, we must form a judgment which side preponderates. Watts.

PREPONDERATION. n. f. [from preponderare.] The act or state of outweighing any thing.

In matters, which require present practice, we must content ourselves with a mere preponderation of probable reasons. Watts's Logic.

To PREPOSE. v. a. [præponere, Fr. præpono, Lat.] To put before.

PREPOSITION. n. f. [præpositio, Fr. præpositio, Lat.] In grammar, a particle governing a case.

A preposition signifies some relation, which the thing signified by the word following it, has to something going before in the discourse; as, Cesar came to Rome. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

PREPOSITOR. n. f. [præpositor, Lat.] A scholar appointed by the master to overlook the rest.

To PREPOSSESS. v. a. [præ and posse, Lat.] To fill with an opinion unexamined; to prejudice.

She was prepossest with the scandal of salivating. Watts.

PREPOSSESSION. n. f. [from prepossest.]

1. Preoccupation; first possession.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man to give piety the prepossession, before other competitors should be able to pretend to him; and so to engage him in holiness first and then in bliss. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Prejudice; preconceived opinion.

Had the poor vulgar rout only, who were held under the prejudices and prepossessions of education, been abused into such idolatrous superstitions, it might have been pitied, but not so much wondered at. South's Sermons.

With thought, from prepossession free, reflect On solar rays, as they the light respect. Blackmore.

PREPOSTEROUS.</

PRE

PREPOSTEROUSLY. adv. [from preposterous.] In a wrong situation; absurdly.

Those things do best please me,
That befall preposterously. Shakep. Midw. Night's Dream.
Upon this supposition, one animal would have its lungs, where another hath its liver, and all the other members pre- posterously placed; there could not be a like configuration of parts in any two individuals. Bentley's Sermons.
PREPOSTEROUNESS. n. f. [from preposterous.] Absurdity; wrong order or method.

PREPOTENCY. n. f. [from præpotentia, Lat.] Superior power; predominance.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals. Brown.

PREPUCE. n. f. [from præputium, Lat.] That which covers the glans; foreskin.

The prepuce was much inflamed and swelled. Wise man.

TO PREQUIRE. v. a. [from præ and require.] To demand previously.

Some primary literal signification is prerequisite to that other of figurative. Hammond.

PREREQUISITE. adj. [from præ and requisite.] Something previously necessary.

The conformation of parts is necessary, not only unto the prerequisite and previous conditions of birth, but also unto the parturition. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Before the existence of compounded body, there must be a pre-existence of active principles, necessarily prerequisite to the mixing these particles of bodies. Hale.

PREROGATIVE. n. f. [from prærogative, Fr. prærogative, low Lat.]
An exclusive or peculiar privilege.

My daughters and the fair Parthenia might far better put in their claim for that prerogative. Sidney.

Our prerogative
Calls not your counsels, but our natural goodness Imparts this. Shakep.

How could communities,
The primogeniture, and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, sceptres, and crowns,
But by degree, stand in authentick place? Shakep.

The great Caliph hath an old prerogative in the choice and confirmation of the kings of Assyria. Kneller.

They are the best laws, by which the king hath the justest prerogative, and the people the best liberty. Bacon.

Had any of these second causes deposed God of his pre- rogative, or had God himself constrained the mind and will of man to impious acts by any celestial enforcements? Raleigh.

They obtained another royal prerogative and power, to make war and peace at their pleasure. Davies.

The house of commons to these their prerogatives over the lords, sent an order to the lieutenant of the tower, that he should cause him to be executed that very day. Clarendon.

For freedom still maintain'd alive,
Freedom an English subjects' sole prerogative, Accept our pious praise. Dryden.

All with the dire prerogative to kill,
Ev'n they would have the pow'r, who want the will. Dryden.

It seems to be the prerogative of human understanding, when it has distinguished any ideas, so as to perceive them to be different, to consider in what circumstances they are capable to be compared. Locke.

I will not consider only the prerogatives of man above other animals, but the endowments which nature hath conferred on his body in common with them. Ray on the Creation.

PREROGATIVED. adj. [from prerogative.] Having an exclusive privilege; having prerogative.

'Tis the plague of great ones,
Prerogativ'd are they less than the base;
'Tis destiny unshunnable. Shakep.

PRES. pres, prest, seem to be derived from the Saxon, preost, a priest; it being usual in after times to drop the letter s in like cases. Gilbert's Camden.

PRESAGE. n. f. [from præ, Fr. præ, Lat.] Prognostick; presumption of futurity.

Joy and shout presage of victory. Milton.

Dreams have generally been considered by authors only as revelations of what has already happened, or as presages of what is to happen. Addison.

TO PRESAGE. v. a. [from præ, Fr. præ, Lat.] To foretell; to prophesy.

Henry's late presaging prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope. Shakep. Henry VI.

What pow'r of mind
Foreseeing, or presaging from the depth
Of knowledge past or present, could have fear'd
How such united force of gods, how such As flood like thee, could ever know repulse. Milton.

This contagion might have been presaged upon consideration of its precursors. Harvey on Consumptions.

With'd freedom, I presage you soon will find,
If heav'n be just, and if to virtue kind. Dryden.

2. Sometimes with of before the thing foretold.

That by certain signs we may presage
Of heats and rains, and wind's impetuous rage,
The sov'reign of the heav'ns has set on high
The moon to mark the changes of the sky. Dryden.

2. To foretoken; to foreknow.

If I may trust the flattering ruth of sleep,
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand. Shakep.

Dreams advise some great good presaging. Milton.

That cloud, that hangs upon thy brow, presages
A greater storm than all the Turkish power Can throw upon us. Denham's Sophy.

When others fell, this standing did presage
The crown thou'd triumph over pop'lar rage. Waller.

PRESAGEMENT. n. f. [from presage.]

1. Forebodement; presention.

I have spent much enquiry, whether he had any ominous
presagement before his end. Wotton.

2. Foretoken.

The falling of salt is an authentick presagement of ill luck, from whence notwithstanding nothing can be naturally feared. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PRESBYTER. n. f. [from presbyter, Lat. πρεσβύτερος.]

1. A priest.

Presbyters absent through infirmity from their churches, might be said to preach by those deputies who in their stead did but read homilies. Hooker, b. v. f. 20.

2. A presbyterian.

And presbyters have their jackpuddings too. Butler.

PRESBYTERIAN. adj. [from presbyter, Lat. πρεσβύτερος.] Consisting of elders;
a term for a modern form of ecclesiastical government.

Chiefly was urged the abolition of episcopal, and the establishing of presbyterian government. King Charles.

PRESBYTERIAN. n. f. [from presbyter.] An abettor of presbytery or calvinistical discipline.

One of the more rigid presbyterians. Swift.

PRESBYTERY. n. f. [from presbyter.] Body of elders, whether priests or laymen.

Those which stood for the presbytery, thought their cause had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of presbytry, where laymen guide
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.

PRESCIENCE. n. f. [from præ, Fr. præ, Lat.] Foreknowledge; knowledge of future things.

They tax our policy, and call it cowardice,
Foretell our presciences, and esteem us a sect
But that of hand. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.

Prescience or foreknowledge, considered in order and nature, if we may speak of God after the manner of men, goeth before providence; for God foreknew all things before he had created them, or before they had being to be cared for; and prescience is no other than an infallible foreknowledge. Ral.

If certain prescience of uncertain events imply a contradiction, it seems it may be struck out of the omniscience of God, and leave no blemish behind. Mora.

Of things of the most accidental and mutable nature, God's prescience is certain. South.

Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,
And prescience only held the second place. Dryden.

PRESIDENT. adj. [from præ, Lat.] Foreknowing; prophetic.

Henry, upon the deliberation concerning the marriage of his eldest daughter into Scotland, had shew'd himself sensible and almost president of this event. Bacon.

Who taught the nations of the field and wood?
President, the tides or tempests to withstand. Pope.

PRESIDENT. adj. [from præ, Lat.] Having foreknowledge.

Thrice happy thou, dear partner of my bed,
Whole holy soul the stroke of fortune fled;
President of ills, and leaving me behind,
To drink the dregs of life. Dryden's Ennis.

TO PRESIND. v. a. [from præ, Lat.] To cut off; to abstract.

A bare act of obliquity does not only presind from, but positively deny such a special dependence. Norris.

PRESIDENT. adj. [from præ, Lat.] Abstracting.

We may, for one single act, abstract from a reward, which nobody, who knows the president faculties of the soul, can deny. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

TO PRESCRIBE. v. a. [from præ, Lat.]

1. To set down authoritatively; to order; to direct.

Doth the strength of some negative arguments prove this kind of negative argument strong, by force whereof all things are denied, which scripture affirmeth not, or all things, which scripture prescribeth not, condemned. Hooker.

To the blank moon her office they prescrib'd. Milton.

There's joy, when to wild will you laws prescribe,
When you bid fortune carry back her bribe. Dryden.

When parents loves are order'd by a son,
Let streams prescribe their fountains where to run. Dryden.

2. To direct

PRE

2. To direct medically.

The end of satire is the amendment of vices by correction; and he who writes honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies. Dryden.

The extremest ways they first ordain,
Prescribing such intolerable pain,
As none but Cæsar could sustain. Dryden.

By a short account of the pressing obligations which lie on the magistrate, I shall not so much prescribe directions for the future, as praise what is past. Atterbury.

Should any man argue, that a physician understands his own art best; and therefore, although he should prescribe poison to all his patients, he cannot be justly punished, but is answerable only to God. Swift.

TO PRESCRIBE. v. n.

1. To influence by long custom.

A reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school, where being seasoned with minor sentences, they prescribe upon our riper years, and never are worn out but with our memories. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. To influence arbitrarily.

The assuming an authority of dictating to others, and a forwardness to prescribe to their opinions; is a constant concomitant of this bias of our judgments. Locke.

3. [Prescribe, Fr.] To form a custom which has the force of law.

That obligation upon the lands did not prescribe or come into disuse, but by fifty consecutive years of exemption. Arb.

4. To write medical directions and forms of medicine.

Modern 'pothecaries, taught the art
By doctor's bills to play the doctor's part,
Bold in the practice of mistaken rules,
Prescribe, apply, and call their matters fools. Pope.

PRESCRIPT. adj. [from prescriptus, Lat.] Directed; accurately laid down in a precept.

Those very laws so added, they themselves do not judge unlawful; as they plainly confess both in matter of prescript attire, and of rites pertaining to burial. Hooker.

PRESCRIPT. n. f. [from prescriptus, Lat.] Direction; precept; model prescribed.

By his prescript, a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, overlaid with gold. Milton.

PRESCRIPTION. n. f. [from prescriptio, Fr. prescriptio, Lat. from prescribo, Lat.]

1. Rules produced and authorized by long custom; custom continued till it has the force of law.

You tell a pedigree
Of threefold and two years, a silly time
To make prescription for a kingdom's worth. Shakep.

Use such as have prevailed before in things you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will strive to maintain their prescription. Bacon's Essays.

It will be found a work of no small difficulty, to dispossess a vice from that heart, where long possession begins to plead prescription. South's Sermons.

Our poet bade us hope this grace to find,
To whom by long prescription you are kind. Dryden.

The Lucrèce plead prescription, for hunting in one of the duke's forests, that lies upon their frontiers. Addison.

2. Medical receipt.

My father left me some prescriptions
Of rare and prov'd effects; such as his reading
And manifest experience had collected For general sovereignty. Shakep.

Approving of my obstinacy against all common prescrip- tions, he asked me, whether I had never heard the Indian way of curing the gout by moxa. Temple.

PRESEANCE. n. f. [from præ, Fr.] Priority of place in sitting.

The ghosts, though rude in their other fashions, may, for their discreet judgment in precedence and preseance, read a lesson to our civilist gentry. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

PRESENCE. n. f. [from præ, Fr. præsentia, Lat.]

1. State of being present; contrary to absence.

To-night we hold a solemn supper,
And I'll request your presence. Shakep.

The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends,
As it diffinates his enemies. Shakep. Henry VI.

2. Approach face to face to a great personage.

The shepherd Dorus answered with such a trembling voice and abashed countenance, and oftentimes so far from the matter, that it was some sport to the young ladies, thinking it want of education, which made him so discomfited with unwonted presence. Sidney, b. i.

Men that very presence fear,
Which once they knew authority did bear!

3. State of being in the view of a superior.

Thou know'st the law of arms is such,
That, who draws a sword in th' presence 't's death. Sha.

I know not by what power I am made bold,
In such a presence here, to plead my thoughts. Shakep.

Wisdom thy sister, and with her did't play
In presence of th' Almighty. Milton.

Perhaps I have not so well consulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their imperfections into such discerning presences. Glanvill's Scep.

PRE

Since clinging cares and trains of inbred fears,
Not aw'd by arms, but in the presence bold,
Without respect to purple or to gold. Dryden.

4. A number assembled before a great person.

Look I so pale.
—Ay; and no man in the presence,
But his red colour hath forlook his cheeks. Shakep.

Odmar, of all this presence does contain,
Give her your wreath whom you esteem most fair. Dryden.

5. Port; air; mien; demeanour.

Virtue is best in a body that is comely, and that hath rather dignity of presence, than beauty of aspect. Bacon.

A graceful presence bespeaks acceptance, gives a force to language, and helps to convince by look and posture. Collier.

How great his presence, how erect his look,
How ev'ry grace, how all his virtuous mother Shines in his face, and charms me from his eyes. Smith.

6. Room in which a prince shows himself to his court.

By them they pass, all gazing on them round,
And to the presence mount, whole glorious view
Their frail amazed senses did confound. Fairy Queen.

An't please your grace, the two great cardinals Wait in the presence. Shakep. Henry VIII.

The lady Anne of Bretagne, passing through the presence in the court of France, and espousing Chartier, a famous poet; leaning upon his elbow fast asleep, openly kissing him, said, we must honour with our kiss, the mouth from whence so many sweet verses have proceeded. Peacham.

7. Readiness at need; quickness at expedients.

A good bodily strength is a felicity of nature, but nothing comparable to a large understanding and ready presence of mind. L'Estrange.

Errors, not to be recall'd, do find
Their best redress from presence of the mind, Courage our greatest failings does supply. Waller.

8. The person of a superior.

To her the sov'reign presence thus reply'd. Milton.

PRESENCE-CHAMBER. n. f. [presence and chamber or room.]

PRESENCE-ROOM. } The room in which a great person receives company.

If these nerves, which are the conduits to convey them from without to their audience in the brain, the mind's pre- sence-room, are so disordered, as not to perform their functions, they have no postern to be admitted by. Locke.

Kneller, with silence and surprise,
We see Britannia's monarch rise,
And aw'd by thy delusive hand,
As in the presence-chamber stand. Addison.

PRESENION. n. f. [from præ, Lat.] Perception beforehand.

The hedgehog's presention of winds is exact. Brown.

PRESENT. adj. [from præ, Fr. præsent, Lat.]

1. Not absent; being face to face; being at hand.

But neither of these are any impediment, because the regent thereof is of an infinite immensity more than commen-surate to the extent of the world, and such as is most intimately present with all the beings of the world. Hale.

Be not often present at feasts, not at all in dissolute company; pleasing objects steal away the heart. Taylor.

Much I have heard
Incredible to me, in this displeas'd,
That I was never present on the place
Of those encounters. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Not past; not future.

Thou future things can't represent
As present. Milton.

The moments past, if thou art wife, retrieve
With pleasant memory of the bliss they gave;
The present hours in pleasant mirth employ,
And bribe the future with the hopes of joy. Prior.

The present age hath not been less inquisitive than the former ages were. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

3. Ready at hand; quick in emergencies.

If a man write little, he had need have a great memory;
if he confer little, he had need have a present wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning. Bacon.

'Tis a high point of philosophy and virtue for a man to be so present to himself, as to be always provided against all accidents. L'Estrange.

4. Favourably attentive; not neglectful; propitious.

Be present to her now, as then,
And let not proud and factious men Against your wills oppose their mights. Benj. Johnson.

The golden goddess, present at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' animated fair,
And gave the sign of granting his desire. Dryden.

Nor could I hope in any place but there

PRE

The PRESENT. An elliptical expression for the present time; the time now existing.

When he saw descend
The son of God to judge them, terrify'd
He fled; not hoping to escape, but shun
The present; fearing guilty, what his wrath Might suddenly inflict. Milton.
Men that set their hearts only upon the present, without looking forward into the end of things are struck at. L'Estr.
Who, since their own short understandings reach
No further than the present, think ev'n the wife, Speak what they think, and tell tales of themselves. Rowe.
At PRESENT. [à present, Fr.] At the present time; now;
elliptically, for the present time.
The state is at present very sensible of the decay in their trade. Addison.

PRESENT. n. f. [present, Fr. from the verb.]
1. A gift; a donative; something ceremoniously given.
Plain Clarence!

I will send thy soul to heav'n,
If heav'n will take the present at our hands. Shakesp.
His dog to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady. Shakesp.
He sent part of the rich spoil, with the admiral's ensign, as a present unto Solymán. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
Say heav'nly muse, shall not thy sacred vein
Afford a present to the infant God?
Hast thou no verse, no hymn, no solemn strain,
To welcome him to this his new abode?
They that are to love inclin'd,
To the first that's fair or kind,
Make a present of their heart. Waller.
Somewhat is sure design'd by fraud or force;
Trust not their *present*s, nor admit the horse. Dryden.
2. A letter or mandate exhibited.
Be it known to all men by these *present*s. Shakesp.

TO PRESENT. v. a. [presento, low Lat. presenter, Fr. in all the senses.]

1. To place in the presence of a superior.
On to the sacred hill
They led him high applauded, and present
Before the seat supreme. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
2. To exhibit to view or notice.
He knows not what he says; and vain is it,
That we present us to him. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To offer; to exhibit.
Thou therefore now advise,
Or hear what to my mind first thoughts present. Milton.
Now ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry moving breath
Presents a foe, and ev'ry foe a death. Denham.
Lecturides's memory is ever ready to offer to his mind something out of other men's writings or conversations, and is presenting him with the thoughts of other persons perpetually.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

4. To give formally and ceremoniously.
Folks in mudwall tenement,
Affording pepper-corn for rent,
Present a turkey or a hen
To those might better spare them ten. Prior.

5. To put into the hands of another.
So ladies in romance assist their knight,
Present the spear, and arm him for the fight. Dryden.

6. To favour with gifts. To present, in the sense of to give, has several structures: we say absolutely, to present a man, to give something to him. This is less in use. The common phrases are to present a gift to a man; or, to present the man with a gift.

Thou spendest thy time in waiting upon such a great one, and thy estate in presenting him; and, after all, hast no other reward, but sometimes to be smiled upon, and always to be smiled at. South's Sermons.

He now presents, as ancient ladies do,
That courted long, at length are forc'd to woo. Dryden.
Octavia presented the poet, for his admirable elegy on her son Marcellus. Dryden.

Should I present thee with rare figur'd plate,
O how thy rising heart would throb and beat. Dryden.

7. To prefer to ecclesiastical benefices.
That he put these bishops in the places of the deceased by his own authority, is notoriously false; for the duke of Saxony always presented. Atterbury.

8. To offer openly.
He was appointed admiral, and presented battle to the French navy, which they refused. Hayward.

9. To introduce by something exhibited to the view or notice.
Not in use.
Tell on, quoth she, the woful tragedy,
The which these reliques sad present unto. Spenser.

10. To lay before a court of judicature, as an object of enquiry.
The grand juries were practis'd effectually with to present
the said pamphlet, with all aggravating epithets. Swift.

PRESENTANEUS. adj. [from presentaneus, Lat.] Ready; quick; immediate.

Some plagues partake of such malignity, that, like a pre- sentaneus poison, they enecate in two hours. Harvey.
PRESENTABLE. adj. [from present.] What may be presented.
Incumbents of churches presentable cannot, by their sole act, grant their incumbencies to others; but may make leaves of the profits thereof. Ayliffe's Paragon.

PRESENTATION. n. f. [presentation, Fr. from present.]

1. The act of presenting.
Prayers are sometimes a presentation of mere desires, as a mean of procuring desired effects at the hands of God. Hooker.
2. The act of offering any one to an ecclesiastical benefice.
He made effectual provision for recovery of advowsons and presentations to churches. Vale.
What, shall the curate controul me? have not I the pre- sentation? Cay.

3. Exhibition.
These presentations of fighting on the stage, are necessary to produce the effects of an heroic play. Dryden.

4. This word is misprinted for presentation.
Although in sundry animals, we deny not a kind of natural meteorology, or innate presentation both of wind and weather, yet that proceeding from sense, they cannot retain that apprehension after death. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PRESENTATIVE. adj. [from present.] Such as that presentations may be made of it.

Mrs. Gullston possessor of the improper parsonage of Bar-well, did procure from the king leave to annex the same to the vicarage, and to make it presentative, and gave them both to St. John's College in Oxon. Spelman.

PRESENTÉE. n. f. [from présenté, Fr.] One presented to a benefice.

Our laws make the ordinary a disturber, if he does not give institution upon the fitness of a person presented to him, or at least give notice to the patron of the disability of his presentee. Ayliffe's Paragon.

PRESENTER. n. f. [from present.] One that presents.

The thing was acceptable, but not the presenter. L'Estr.
PRESENTIAL. adj. [from présent.] Supposing actual presence.

By union, I do not understand that which is local or pre- sential, because I consider God as omnipresent. Norris.

PRESENTIALITY. n. f. [from présential.] State of being present.
This eternal, indivisible act of his existence makes all futures actually present to him; and it is the presentiality of the object, which founds the unerring certainty of his knowledge. South's Sermons.

TO PRESENTIATE. v. a. [from présent.] To make present.

The fancy may be to strong, as to presentiate upon one theatre, all that ever it took notice of in times past: the power of fancy, in presentiating any one thing that is past, being no less wonderful, than having that power, it should also acquire the perfection to presentiate them all. Gray.

PRESENTIFICK. adj. [présens and facio, Latin.] Making present. Not in use.

PRESENTIFICKLY. adv. [from présentifick.] In such a manner as to make present.

The whole evolution of times and ages, from everlasting to everlasting, is collectively and presentifickly represented to God at once, as if all things and actions were, at this very instant, really present and existent before him. Mure.

PRESENTLY. adv. [from présent.]

1. At present; at this time; now.
The towns and forts you presently have, are still left unto you to be kept either with or without garriçons, so as you alter not the laws of the country. Sidney.

I hope we may presume, that a rare thing it is not in the church of God, even for that very word which is read to be presently their joy, and afterwards their study that hear it. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.

To speak of it as requireth, would require very long discourse; all I will presently say is this. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
Covetous ambition, thinking all too little which presently it hath, supposeth itself to stand in need of all which it hath not. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Immediately; soon after.

Tell him, that no history can match his policies, and pre- sently the foe shall measure himself by himself. South.

PRESENTMENT. n. f. [from présent.]

1. The act of presenting.
When comes your book forth?
Upon the heels of my presentment. Shakesp.

2. Any thing presented or exhibited; representation.

Thus I hurt
My dazzling spells into the spongy air,
Of power to cheat the eye with bleat illusion,
And give it false presentments, lest the place
And my quaint habits breed astonishment. Milton.

3. In law, presentment is a mere denunciation of the jurors themselves or some other officer, as justice, constable, lecherer, fur-veyors, and, without any information, of an offence in-quireable in the court to which it is presented. Cowel.

PRE

The grand juries were practis'd effectually with, to present the said pamphlet with all aggravating epithets, and their pre- sentments published for several weeks in all the news-papers. Swift to Pope.

PRESENTNESS. n. f. [from présent.] Presence of mind; quickness at emergencies.

Goring had a much better understanding, a much keener courage, and presentness of mind in danger. Clarendon.

PRESERVATION. n. f. [from præservo.] The act of preserving; care to preserve; act of keeping from destruction, decay, or any ill.

Nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I give my tendance to. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

The eyes of the Lord are upon them that love him, he is their mighty protection, a preservation from stumbling, and a help from falling. Ecclesi. xxxiv. 16.

Ev'ry senseless thing, by nature's light,
Doth preservation seek, destruction shun.
Our allwise maker has put into man the uneasiness of hunger, thirst, and other natural desires, to determine their wills for the preservation of themselves, and the continuation of their species. Lacke.

PRESERVATIVE. n. f. [præservativus, Fr. from præservo.] That which has the power of preserving; something preventive; something that confers security.

If we think that the church needeth not those ancient pre- servatives, which ages before us were glad to use, we deceive ourselves. Hooker.

It hath been anciently in use to wear tablets of arsenick, as preservatives against the plague; for that being poisons themselves, they draw the venom to them from the spirits. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Were there truth herein, it were the best preservative for princes, and persons exalted unto such fears. Brown.

Bodies kept clean, which use preservatives, are likely to escape infection. Harvey.

The most effectual preservative of our virtue, is to avoid the conversation of wicked men. Rogers.

Molly is an Egyptian plant, and was really made use of as a preservative against enchantment. Brown's Notes on Ody.

TO PRESERVE. v. a. [præservo, low Latin; præserve, Fr.]

1. To save; to defend from destruction or any evil; to keep.
The Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and pre- serve me unto his heavenly kingdom. 2 Tim. iv. 18.

God sent me to preserve you a posterity, and save your lives. Gen. xlv. 7.

She shall lead me soberly in my doings, and preserve me in her power. Wisdom ix. 11.

He did too frequently gratify their unjustifiable designs, a guilt all men, who are obnoxious, are liable to, and can hardly preserve themselves from. Clarendon.

We can preserve unhurt our minds.

To be indifferent, which of two opinions is true, is the right temper of the mind, that preserves it from being impelled on, till it has done its best to find the truth. Lacke.

Every petty prince in Germany must be intreated to pre- serve the queen of Great Britain upon her throne. Swift.

2. To season fruits and other vegetables with sugar and in other proper pickles: as, to preserve plums, walnuts, and cucumbers.

PRESERVE. n. f. [from the verb.] Fruit preserved whole in sugar.

All this is easily discerned in those fruits, which are brought in preserves unto us. Brown.

The fruit with the hulk, when tender and young, makes a good preserve. Mortimer.

PRESERVER. n. f. [from præserve.]

1. One who preserves; one who keeps from ruin or mischief.
Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side. Shakesp.

To be always thinking, perhaps, is the privilege of the infinite author and preserver of things, who never slumbers nor sleeps; but is not competent to any finite being. Lacke.

Andrew Doria has a statue erected to him, with the glorious title of deliverer of the commonwealth; and one of his family another, that calls him its preserver. Addison.

2. He who makes preserves of fruit.

TO PRESIDE. v. n. [from præsideo, Lat. presider, Fr.] To be set over; to have authority over.

Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden.

O'er the plans
Of thriving peace, thy thoughtful fires preside. Thomson.

PRESIDENCY. n. f. [presidencia, Fr. from president.] Superintendence.

What account can be given of the growth of plants from mechanical principles, moved without the presidency and guidance of some superior agent. Roy on the Creation.

PRESIDENT. n. f. [præsidentis, Lat. president, Fr.]

1. One placed with authority over others; one at the head of others.
As the president of my kingdom, will I Appear there for a man. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

The tutor sits in the chair as president or moderator, to see that the rules of disputation be observed. Watts.

PRE

2. Governour; prefect.
How might those captive Israelites, under the oversight and government of Assyrian presidents, be able to leave the places they were to inhabit. Breerewood on Languages.

3. A tutelary power.

This last complaint th' indulgent ears did pierce
Of just Apollo, president of verse. Waller.

PRESIDENTSHIP. n. f. [from president.] The office and place of president.

When things came to trial of practice, their pastors learning would be at all times of force to overpersuade simple men, who, knowing the time of their own presidentship to be but short, would always stand in fear of their ministers perpetual authority. Hooker's Preface.

PRESIDIAL. adj. [præsidium, Lat.] Relating to a garrison.

TO PRESS. v. a. [presser, Fr. presser, pressus, Lat.]

1. To squeeze; to crush.
The grapes I pressed into Pharaoh's cup. Gen. xl. 11.
Good measure pressed down, shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. Luke vi. 38.

From sweet kernels press'd,
She tempers dulcet creams. Milton.
I put pledgets of lint pressed out on the excoriation. Wifem.

Their morning milk the peasants press at night,
Their evening milk before the rising light. Dryden.
After pressing out of the colesseed for oil in Lincolnshire, they burn the cakes to heat their ovens. Mortimer.

2. To distress; to crush with calamities.

Once or twice she heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it press'd her heart. Shakesp.

3. To constrain; to compel; to urge by necessity.

The experience of his goodness in her own deliverance, might cause her merciful disposition to take so much the more delight in saving others, whom the like necessity should press. Hooker.

The posts that rode upon mules and camels, went out, being hastened and pressed on by the king's commands. Ejsher.
I was press'd by his majesty's commands, to assist at the treaty. Temple's Miscel.

He gapes; and straight
With hunger press'd, devours the pleasing bait. Dryden.

He press'd a letter upon me, within this hour, to deliver to you. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

4. To drive by violence.

Come with words as medical as true,
Honest as either, to purge him of that humour
That presses him from sleep. Shakesp.

5. To affect strongly.

Paul was press'd in spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. Acts xviii. 5.
Wickedness condemned by her own witness, and press'd with conscience, forceth grievous things. Wisdom xvii. 11.

6. To enforce; to inculcate with argument or importunity.

Be sure to press upon him every motive. Addison.
I am the more bold to press it upon you, because these accomplishments fit more handsomely on persons of quality, than any other. Felton on the Classics.

Those who negotiated, took care to make demands impossible to be complied with; and therefore might securely press every article, as if they were in earnest. Swift.

7. To urge; to bear strongly on.

Chymists I may press with arguments, drawn from some of the eminentest writers of their sect. Boyle.

8. To compress; to hug, as in embracing.

He press'd her matron lips
With kisses pure. Milton.

She took her son, and press'd
Th' illustrious infant to her fragrant breast. Dryden.

His easy heart receiv'd the guilty flame,
And from that time he press'd her with his passion. Smith.

And press'd Palemon closer in her arms. Pespe.

9. To act upon with weight.

The place thou press'st on thy mother earth,
Is all thy empire now: now it contains thee. Dryden.

10. To make earnest. Press is here perhaps rather an adjective;
press, Fr. or from pressis or empresse, Fr.

Let them be press'd, and ready to give succours to their confederates, as it ever was with the Romans; for if the confederate had leagues defensive with divers other states, and implored their aids, the Romans would ever be the formost.

Press for their country's honour and their king's,
On their sharp beaks they whet their pointed things. Dryd.

11. To force into military service. This is properly impress.
Do but say to me what I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am press'd into it. Shakesp.

For every man that Bolingbroke hath press'd
To lift sharp steel against our golden crown, Heav'n for his Richard hath in store
A glorious angel. Shakesp. Richard II.

From London by the king was I press'd forth. Shakesp.
20 I They

PRE

They are enforced of very necessity to press the best and greatest part of their men out of the West countries, which is no small charge. Raleigh.

The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army by pressing, found opposition in many places. Clarendon.

The peaceful peasant to the wars is press'd,
The fields lie fallow in inglorious rest. Dryden.

Must grandson Filbert to the wars be press'd.
You were press'd for the sea-service, and got off with much ado. Gay.

To Press. v. n.
1. To act with compulsive violence; to urge; to distress.

If there be fair proofs on the one side, and none at all on the other, and if the most pressing difficulties be on that side, on which there are no proofs, this is sufficient to render one opinion very credible, and the other altogether incredible. Tillotson's Sermons.

A great many uneasinesses always soliciting the will, it is natural, that the greatest and most pressing should determine it to the next action. Locke.

2. To go forward with violence to any object.

I make bold to press
With so little preparation. Shakespeare.

I press toward the mark for the prize. Phil. iii. 14.

The Turks gave a great shout, and press'd in on all sides, to have entered the breach. Knolles.

Thronging crowds press on you as you pass,
And with their eager joy make triumph flow. Dryden.

Th' insulgent victor presses on the more,
And treads the steps the vanquish'd trod before. Dryden.

She is always drawn in a posture of walking, it being as natural for Hope to press forward to her proper objects, as for Fear to fly from them. Addison on Ancient Medals.

Let us not therefore faint, or be weary in our journey, much less turn back or sit down in despair; but press cheerfully forward to the high mark of our calling. Rogers.

3. To make invasion; to encroach.

On superior powers
Were we to press, inferior might on ours. Pope.

4. To crowd; to throng.

For he had healed many, inasmuch that they press'd upon him for to touch him. Mar. iii. 10.

Counsel the may; and I will give thy ear
The knowledge first of what is fit to hear:
What I transact with others or alone,
Beware to learn; not press too near the throne. Dryden.

5. To come unseasonably or importunately.

6. To urge with vehemence and importunity.

He press'd upon them greatly; and they turned in. Gen.

The less blood he drew, the more he took of treasure; and, as some construed it, he was the more sparing in the one, that he might be the more pressing in the other. Bacon.

So thick the shivering army stands,
And press for passage with extended hands. Dryden.

7. To act upon or influence.

When arguments press equally in matters indifferent, the safest method is to give up ourselves to neither. Addison.

8. To Press upon. To invade; to push against.

Patroclus presses upon Hector too boldly, and by obliging him to fight, discovers it was not the true Achilles. Pope.

Press. n. f. [pressoir, Fr. from the verb.]

1. The instrument by which any thing is crushed or squeezed.

The press is full, the fats overflow. Jael iii. 13.

When one came to the press fats to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty. Hag. ii. 16.

The stomach and intestines are the press, and the lacteal vessels the strainers, to separate the pure emulsion from the faeces. Arbutnot.

They kept their cloaths, when they were not worn, constantly in a press, to give them a lustre. Arbutnot.

2. The instrument by which books are printed.

These letters are of the second edition; he will print them out of doubt, for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two in. Shakespeare.

3. Crowd; tumult; throng.

Paul and Barnabas, when infidels admiring their virtues, went about to sacrifice unto them, rent their garments in token of horror, and as frighted, ran crying through the press of the people, O men wherefore do ye these things. Hooker.

She held a great gold chain yinked well,
Whose upper end to highest heaven was knit,
And lower part did reach to lowest hell,
And all that press did round about her swell,
To catchen hold of that long chain. Fairy Queen.

Who is it in the press that calls on me?
I hear a tongue, shriller than all the musick, Cry, Caesar. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

Death having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves them insensible; his siege is now
Against the mind; the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies;

Which in their throng, and press to that last hold,
Confound themselves. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Ambitious Turnus in the press appears,
And aggravating crimes augment their fears. Dryden.

A new express all Agra does affright,
Darah and Aurengzebe are join'd in fight;
The press of people thickens to the court,
Th' impatient croud devouring the report. Dryden.

Through the press enrag'd Thalestris flies,
And scatters deaths around from both her eyes. Pope.

4. A kind of wooden case or frame for cloaths and other uses.

Creep into the kill hole.—Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk; but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. A commission to force men into military service. For impress.
If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a fow'd gunnet; I have misus'd the king's press damnably. Shakespeare.

Concerning the mufters and presses for sufficient mariners to serve in his majesty's ships, either the care is very little, or the bribery very great. Raleigh.

Press'd. n. f. [press and bed.] Bed so formed, as to be shut up in a case.

Presser. n. f. [from press.] One that presses or works at a press.

Of the stuffs I give the profits to dyers and pressers. Swift.

Press-gang. n. f. [press and gang.] A crew that strols about the streets to force men into naval service.

Pressingly. adv. [from pressing.] With force; closely.

The one contracts his words, speaking pressingly and short; the other delights in long-breathed accents. Howell.

Pression. n. f. [from press.] The act of pressing.

If light confited only in pression, propagated without actual motion, it would not be able to agitate and heat the bodies, which reflect and reflect it: if it confited in motion, propagated to all distances in an instant, it would require an infinite force every moment, in every shining particle, to generate that motion: and if it confited in pression or motion, propagated either in an instant or in time, it would bend into the shadow. Newton's Opticks.

Pressitant. adj. Gravitating; heavy. A word not in use.

Neither the celestial matter of the vortices, nor the air, nor water are pressitant in their proper places. Mars.

Pressman. n. f. [press and man.]

1. One who forces another into service; one who forces away.

One only path to all; by which the pressmen came. Chop.

2. One who makes the impression of print by the press: distinct from the compositor, who ranges the types.

Pressmoney. n. f. [press and money.] Money given to a soldier when he is taken or forced into the service.

Here Peasgood, take my pouch, 'tis all I own,
'Tis my pressmoney.—Can this silver fail? Gay.

Pressure. n. f. [from press.]

1. The act of pressing or crushing.

2. The state of being pressed or crushed.

3. Force acting against any thing; gravitation; pression.

The inequality of the pressure of parts appeareth in this; that if you take a body of stone, and another of wood of the same magnitude and shape, and throw them with equal force, you cannot throw the wood so far as the stone. Bacon.

Although the glasses were a little convex, yet this transparent spot was of a considerable breadth, which breadth seemed principally to proceed from the yielding inwards of the parts of the glasses, by reason of their mutual pressure. Newton.

The blood flows through the vessels by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive. Arbutnot.

4. Violence inflicted; oppression.

A wife father ingenuously confessed, that those, which persuaded pressure of consciences, were commonly interested therein. Bacon's Essays.

5. Affliction; grievance; distress.

Mine own and my people's pressures are grievous, and peace would be very pleasing. King Charles.

The genuine price of lands in England would be twenty years purchase, were it not for accidental pressures under which it labours. Child's Discourse of Trade.

To this consideration he retreats, in the midst of all his pressures, with comfort; in this thought, notwithstanding the sad afflictions with which he was overwhelmed, he mightily exults. Atterbury's Sermons.

Excellent was the advice of Elephas to Job, in the midst of his great troubles and pressures, acquaint thyself now with God, and be at peace. Atterbury.

6. Impression; stamp; character made by impression.

I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
All faws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation copy'd there. Shakespeare.

Press. adj. [press or pré, Fr.]

1. Ready; not dilatory. This is said to have been the original sense of the word press men; men, not forced into the service, as now we understand it, but men, for a certain sum received, press or ready to march at command. Each

PRE

Each mind is press'd, and open every ear,
To hear new tidings, though they no way joy us. Fairfax.

Gritus desired nothing more than, at his first entrance, to have confirm'd the opinion of his authority in the minds of the vulgar people, by the press and ready attendance of the Vayvod. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

2. Neat; tight. In both senses the word is obsolete.

More wealth any where, to be brece
More people, more handsome and press'd. Tusser's Husbandry.

Where find ye?

Press. n. f. [press, Fr.] A loan.

He required of the city a press of six thousand marks; but, after many parleys, he could obtain but two thousand pounds. Bacon's Henry VII.

Press! begone! 'tis here again;
There's ev'ry piece as big as ten. Swift.

Presumably. adv. [from presume.] Without examination.

Authors presumably writing by common places, wherein, for many years, promiscuously amassing all that make for their subject, break forth at last into useless rhapsodies. Brown.

To PRESUME. v. n. [presumer, Fr. presumo, Lat.]

1. To suppose; to believe previously without examination.

O much deceiv'd, much failing, hapless Eve!
Of thy presum'd return! event perverse!
Experience supplants the use of conjecture in the point; we do not only presume it may be so, but actually find it is so. Government of the Tongue.

2. To suppose; to affirm without immediate proof.

Although in the relation of Moses there be very few persons mentioned, yet there are more to be presumed. Brown.

I presume,
That as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love; my pow'r rain'd honour more
On you, than any. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

3. To venture without positive leave.

There was a matter we were no less desirous to know, than fearful to ask, lest we might presume too far. Bacon.

I to the heavenly vision thus presum'd. Milton.

4. To form confident or arrogant opinions.

The life of Ovid being already written in our language, I will not presume to far upon myself, to think I can add any thing to Mr. Sandys his undertaking. Dryden.

'Tis man presumes upon his parts, that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision beforehand. Locke.

5. To make confident or arrogant attempts.

In this we fail to perform the thing, which God seeth meet, convenient and good; in that we presume to see what is meet and convenient, better than God himself. Hooker.

God, to remove his ways from human sense,
Plac'd heav'n from earth so far, that earthly light,
If it presume, might err in things too high,
And no advantage gain. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

6. It has on or upon sometimes before the thing supposed, or causing presumption.

He, that would not deceive himself, ought to build his hypothesis on matter of fact, and not presume on matter of fact, because of his hypothesis. Locke.

Luther presumes upon the gift of continency. Atterbury.

7. It has of sometimes, but not properly.

Presuming of his force, with sparkling eyes,
Already he devours the promis'd prize. Dryden.

Presumer. n. f. [from presume.] One that presupposes; an arrogant person.

Heavy with some high minds is an overweight of obligation; otherwise great deservings do grow intolerable presumers. Watton.

Presumption. n. f. [presumptus, Lat. presomption, Fr.]

1. Supposition previously formed.

Thou hast shew'd us how unsafe it is to offend thee, upon presumptions afterwards to please thee. King Charles.

Though men in general believed a future state, yet they had but confused presumptions of the nature and condition of it. Reg.

2. Confidence grounded on any thing presupposed.

A presumption, upon this aid, was the principal motive for the undertaking. Clarendon, b. viii.

Those at home held their immoderate engrossments of power by no other tenure, than their own presumption upon the necessity of affairs. Swift's Miscellanies.

3. An argument strong, but not demonstrative; a strong probability.

The error and insufficiency of their arguments doth make it, on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption, that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things, as he hath not enabled them to prove. Hooker, b. v. f. 10.

4. Arrogance; confidence blind and adventurous; presumptuousness.

PRE

Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;
For I am forty, that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art. Shakespeare.

It warns a warier carriage in the thing,
Left blind presumption work their ruining. Daniel.

I had the presumption to dedicate to you a very unfinished piece. Dryden.

5. Unreasonable confidence of divine favour.

The awe of his majesty will keep us from presumption, and the promises of his mercy from despair. Rogers.

Presumptive. adj. [presumptive, Fr. from presume.]

1. Taken by previous supposition.

We commonly take shape and colour for so presumptive ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we readily say this is a lion, and that a rose. Locke.

2. Supposed; as, the presumptive heir: opposed to the heir apparent.

3. Confident; arrogant; presumptuous.

There being two opinions repugnant to each other, it may not be presumptive or sceptical to doubt of both. Brown.

Presumptuous. adj. [presumptuous, presumptueux, Fr.]

1. Arrogant; confident; insolent.

Presumptuous priest, this place commands my patience. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

I follow him not
With any token of presumptuous suit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him. Shakespeare.

The boldness of advocates prevail with judges; whereas they should imitate God, who represseth the presumptuous, and giveth grace to the modest. Bacon's Essays.

Their minds somewhat rais'd
By false presumptuous hope. Milton.

Some will not venture to look beyond received notions of the age, nor have to presumptuous a thought, as to be wiser than their neighbours. Locke.

2. Irreverent with respect to holy things.

Thus I presumptuous: and the vision bright,
As with a smile more brighten'd, thus reply'd. Milton.

The pow'r incens'd
Punish'd his presumptuous pride,
That for his daring enterprize the dy'd. Dryden.

Can't thou love
Presumptuous Crete, that boasts the tomb of Jove. Pope.

Presumptuously. adv. [from presumptuous.]

1. Arrogantly; irreverently.

Do you, who study nature's works, decide,
Whilst I the dark mysterious cause admire;
Nor, into what the gods conceal, presumptuously enquire. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

2. With vain and groundless confidence in divine favour.

I entreat your prayers, that God will keep me from all premature persuasion of my being in Christ, and not suffer me to go on presumptuously or desperately in any course. Hamm.

Presumptuousness. n. f. [from presumptuous.] Quality of being presumptuous; confidence; irreverence.

Presupposal. n. f. [præ and supposal.] Supposal previously formed.

All things necessary to be known that we may be saved, but known with presupposal of knowledge concerning certain principles, whereof it receiveth us already persuaded. Hooker.

To PRESUPPOSE. v. a. [presupposer, Fr. præ and suppose.]

To suppose as previous.

In as much as righteous life presupposeth life, in as much as to live virtuously it is impossible except we live; therefore the first impediment, which naturally we endeavour to remove, is penury and want of things, without which we cannot live. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.

All kinds of knowledge have their certain bounds; each of them presupposeth many necessary things learned in other sciences, and known beforehand. Hooker, b. i.

Presupposition. n. f. [præ and supposition, Fr. præ and supposition.] Supposition previously formed.

Presurmise. n. f. [præ and surmise.] Surmise previously formed.

It was your presurmise,
That, in the dole of blows, your son might drop. Shakespeare.

Preterence. n. f. [preterentus, Lat.]

1. A false argument grounded upon fictitious postulates.

This preterence against religion will not only be baffled, but we shall gain a new argument to persuade men over. Tillotson.

2. The act of showing or alleging what is not real.

With flying speed and seeming great preterence
Came running in a messenger. Fairy Queen.

So strong his appetite was to those executions he had been accus'd to in Ireland, without any kind of commission or preterence of authority. Clarendon.

O worthy not of liberty alone,
Too mean preterence, but honour.

Let not the Trojans, with

PRE

3. Assumption; claim to notice.
Despise not these few ensuing pages; for never was any thing of this pretence more ingenuously imparted. Evelyn.
4. Claim true or false.
Spirits in our just pretences arm'd Fell with us. Milton.
Primogeniture cannot have any pretence to a right of solely inheriting property or power. Locke.
5. Shakespeare uses this word with more affinity to the original Latin, for something threatened, or held out to terrify.
I have conceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shakespeare.
In the great hand of God I stand, and thence Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight
Of treas'rous malice. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
He hath writ this to feel my affection for your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shakespeare. King Lear.
- To PRETEND. v. a. [pretendo, Lat. pretendere, Fr.]
1. To hold out; to stretch forward. This is mere Latinity, and not used.
Lucanus, to lash his horses, bends Prone to the wheels, and his left foot pretends. Dryden.
2. To portend; to forebode. Not in use.
All these movements seemed to be pretended by moving of the earth in Suffolk. Hayward.
3. To make any appearance of having; to allege falsely.
This let him know,
Left wilfully transgressing he pretend Surprised. Milton.
What reason then can any man pretend against religion, when it is so apparently for the benefit, not only of human society, but of every particular person. Tillotson.
4. To show hypocritically.
'Tis their interest to guard themselves from those riotous effects of pretended zeal, nor is it less their duty. D. of Piety.
5. To hold out as a delusive appearance; to exhibit as a cover of something hidden. This is rather Latin.
Warn all creatures from these Henceforth; lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, share them. Milton's Par. Lost.
6. To claim. In this sense we rather say, pretend to.
Chiefs shall be grudging the part which they pretend. Dry.
Are they not rich? what more can they pretend? Pope.
- To PRETEND. v. n.
1. To put in a claim truly or falsely. It is seldom used without shade of censure.
What peace can be, where both to one pretend?
But they more diligent, and we more strong. Dryden.
In those countries that pretend to freedom, princes are subject to those laws which their people have chosen. Swift.
2. To presume on ability to do any thing; to profess presumptuously.
Of the ground of redness in this sea are we not fully satisfied; for there is another red sea, whose name we pretend not to make out from these principles. Brown.
- PRETENDER. n. f. [from pretend.] One who lays claim to any thing.
The prize was disputed only till you were seen; now all pretenders have withdrawn their claims. Dryden.
Whatever victories the several pretenders to the empire obtained over one another, they are recorded on coins without the least reflection. Addison on Ancient Medals.
The numerous pretenders to places would never have been kept in order, if expectation had been cut off. Swift.
To just contempt ye vain pretenders fall,
The people's fable and the scorn of all.
Pretenders to philosophy or good sense grow fond of this sort of learning. Watts.
- PRETENDINGLY. adv. [from pretending.] Arrogantly; presumptuously.
I have a particular reason to look a little pretendingly at present. Collier on Pride.
- PRETENSION. n. f. [pretensio, Lat. pretention, Fr.]
1. Claim true or false.
But if to unjust things thou dost pretend,
Ere they begin, let thy pretensions end. Denham.
Men indulge those opinions and practices, that favour their pretensions. L'Estrange.
The commons demand that the consulship should lie in common to the pretensions of any Roman. Locke.
2. Fictitious appearance. A Latin phrase or sense.
This was but an invention and pretension given out by the Spaniards. Bacon.
- PRETER. n. f. [preter, Lat.] A particle, which prefixed to words of Latin original, signifies before.
PRETERIMPERFECT. adj. In grammar, denotes the tense not perfectly past.
PRETERIT. adj. [preterit, Fr. preteritus, Lat.] Past.
PRETERITION. n. f. [preterition, Fr. from preterit.] The act of going past; the state of being past.
PRETERITNESS. n. f. [from preterit.] State of being past; not present; not futurity.

PRE

- We cannot conceive a preterit still backwards in infinitum, that never was present, as we can an endless futurity, that never will be present; so that though one is potentially infinite, yet nevertheless the other is positively finite: and this reasoning doth not at all affect the eternal existence of the adorable divinity, in whose invariable nature there is no past nor future. Bentley's Sermon.
- PRETERLAPSED. adj. [preterlapsus, Lat.] Past and gone.
We look with a superstitious reverence upon the accounts of preterlapsed ages. Glanvill's Scen.
Never was there so much of either, in any preterlapsed age, as in this. Walker.
- PRETERLEGAL. adj. [preter and legal.] Not agreeable to law.
I expected some evil customs preterlegal, and abuses personal, had been to be removed. King Charles.
- PRETERMISSION. n. f. [pretermisio, Fr. pretermisio, Lat.] The act of omitting.
To PRETERMIT. v. a. [pretermitto, Lat.] To pass by.
The fees, that are termly given to these deputies, for recompence of their pains, I do purposely pretermitt; because they be not certain. Bacon.
- PRETERNATURAL. adj. [preter and natural.] Different from what is natural; irregular.
We will enquire into the cause of this vile and preternatural temper of mind, that should make a man please himself with that, which can no ways reach those faculties, which nature has made the proper seat of pleasure. South's Sermon.
That form, which the earth is under at present, is preternatural, like a statue made and broken again. Burnet.
- PRETERNATURALLY. adv. [from preternatural.] In a manner different from the common order of nature.
Simple air, preternaturally attenuated by heat, will make itself room, and break and blow up all that which resisteth it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- PRETERNATURALNESS. n. f. [from preternatural.] Manner different from the order of nature.
PRETERPERFECT. adj. [preteritum perfectum, Lat.] A grammatical term applied to the tense which denotes time absolutely past.
The same natural aversion to loquacity has of late made a considerable alteration in our language, by closing in one syllable the termination of our preterperfect tenses, as drown'd, walk'd, for drowned, walked. Addison's Spectator.
- PRETERPLUPERFECT. adj. [preteritum plusquam perfectum, Lat.] The grammatical epithet for the tense denoting time relatively past, or past before some other past time.
PRETEXT. n. f. [pretextus, Lat. pretexte, Fr.] Pretence; false appearance; false allegation.
My pretext to strike at him admits
A good construction. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Under this pretext, the means he sought To ruin such whose might did much exceed His pow'r to wrong. Daniel's Civil War.
As chymists gold from brags by fire would draw,
Pretexts are into treason forg'd by law. Denham.
I shall not say with how much, or how little pretext of reason they managed those disputes. Decay of Piety.
They suck the blood of those they depend upon, under a pretext of service and kindness. L'Estrange.
- PRETOR. n. f. [pretor, Lat. pretor, Fr.] The Roman judge.
It is now sometimes taken for a mayor.
Good Cinna, take this paper;
And look you lay it in the pretor's chair. Shakespeare.
Porphyrius, whom you Egypt's pretor made,
Is come from Alexandria to your aid. Dryden.
An advocate, pleading the cause of his client before one of the pretors, could only produce a single witness, in a point where the law required two. Spectator, N° 55b.
- PRETORIAN. adj. [pretorianus, Lat. pretorien, Fr.] Judicial; exercised by the pretor.
The chancery had the pretorian power for equity; the star-chamber had the censorious power for offences. Bacon.
- PRETTILY. adv. [from pretty.] Neatly; elegantly; pleasingly without dignity or elevation.
How prettily the young swain seems to wash
The hand was fair before. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
One faith prettily; in the quenching of the flame of a perfidious age, nature is like people that come to quench the fire of a house; so busy, as one leaveth another. Bacon.
Children, kept out of ill company, take a pride to behave themselves prettily, after the fashion of others. Locke.
- PRETTINESS. n. f. [from pretty.] Beauty without dignity; neat elegance without elevation.
There is goodliness in the bodies of animals, as in the ox, greyhound and stag; or majesty and stateliness, as in the lion, horse, eagle and cock; grave awfulness, as in mastiffs; or elegance and prettiness, as in lesser dogs and most sort of birds; all which are several modes of beauty.
Those drops of prettiness, scatteredly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to defecate and exalt our conceptions, not to inveigle or detain our passions. Locke.
- PRETTY. adj. [præ, finery, Sax. pretto, Italian; prat, prattish, Dutch.]
1. Neat; elegant; pleasing without surprise or elevation.
Of these idle Greeks have many pretty tales. Raleigh.
They found themselves involved in a train of mistakes, by taking up some pretty hypothesis in philosophy. Watts.
2. Beautiful without grandeur or dignity.
The pretty gentleman is the most complaisant creature in the world, and is always of my mind. Spektor.
3. It is used in a kind of diminutive contempt in poetry, and in conversation: as, a pretty fellow indeed!
A pretty task; and so I told the fool,
Who needs must undertake to please by rule. Dryden.
He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot. Addison.
4. Not very small. This is a very vulgar use.
A knight of Wales, with shipping and some pretty company, did go to discover those parts. Abbot.
Cut off the stalks of cucumbers, immediately after their bearing, close by the earth, and then cast a pretty quantity of earth upon the plant, and they will bear next year before the ordinary time. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
I would have a mount of some pretty height, leaving the wall of the enclosure breast high. Bacon's Essays.
Of this mixture we put a parcel into a crucible, and suffered it for a pretty while to continue red hot. Boyle.
A weazel a pretty way off stood leering at him. L'Estr.
- PRETTY. adv. In some degree. This word is used before adverbs or adjectives to intend their signification; it is less than very.
The world begun to be pretty well stocked with people, and human industry drained those uninhabited places. Burnet.
I shall not enquire how far this lofty method may advance the reputation of learning; but I am pretty sure 'tis no great addition to theirs who use it. Collier.
A little voyage round the lake took up five days, though the wind was pretty fair for us all the while. Addison.
I have a fondness for a project, and a pretty tolerable genius that way myself. Addison's Guardian, N° 107.
These colours were faint and dilute, unless the light was trajected obliquely; for by that means they became pretty vivid. Newton's Opticks.
This writer every where insinuates, and, in one place, pretty plainly professes himself a sincere christian. Atterbury.
The copper halfpence are coined by the publick, and every piece worth pretty near the value of the copper. Swift.
The first attempts of this kind were pretty modest. Baker.
- To PREVAIL. v. n. [prevailor, Fr. prevailere, Lat.]
1. To be in force; to have effect; to have power; to have influence.
This custom makes the short-sighted bigots, and the warrier scepticks, as far as it prevails. Locke.
2. To overcome; to gain the superiority. With on or upon, sometimes over or against.
They that were your enemies, are his,
And have prevail'd as much on him as you. Shakespeare.
Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousy of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me. King Charles.
I told you then he should prevail, and speed
On his bad errand. Milton.
The millenium prevailed long against the truth upon the strength of authority. Decay of Piety.
While Malbro's cannon thus prevails by land,
Britain's sea-chiefs by Anna's high command,
Refrless o'er the Thulean billows ride. Blackmore.
Thus fong could prevail
O'er death and o'er hell,
A conquest how hard and how glorious;
Though fate had fast bound her
With Styx nine times round her,
Yet musick and love were victorious. Pope.
This kingdom could never prevail against the united power of England. Swift.
3. To gain influence; to operate effectually.
4. To persuade or induce by entreaty. It has with, upon or on before the person persuaded.
With minds obdurate nothing prevaileth, as well they that preach, as they that read unto such, shall still have cause to complain with the prophets of old, who will give credit unto our teaching? Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
He was prevailed with to restrain the earl of Bristol upon his first arrival. Clarendon.
The serpent with me
Persuatively have so prevail'd, that I Have also tasted. Milton.
They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under the conduct of a guide, that it is an hundred to one will mislead them, than he that has not yet taken a step, and is likelier to be prevailed on to enquire after the right way. Locke.
There are four sorts of arguments that men, in their reasonings with others, make use of to prevail on them. Locke.

He would resume the conduct of the day,
Nor let the world be lost in endless night;
Prevail'd upon at last, again he took
The harnes'd steeds, that fill with horror shook. Addison.
Upon assurances of revolt, the queen was prevailed with to send her forces upon that expedition. Swift.
Prevail upon some judicious friend to be your constant hearer, and allow him the utmost freedom. Swift.
- PREVAILING. adj. [from prevail.] Predominant; having most influence.
Probabilities, which cross men's appetites and prevailing passions, run the same fate: let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh. Locke.
Save the friendless infants from oppression;
Saints shall assist thee with prevailing prayers,
And warring angels combat on thy side. Rowe.
- PREVAILMENT. n. f. [from prevail.] Prevalence.
Messengers
Of strong prevailment in unhard'n'd youth. Shakespeare.
- PREVALENCE. n. f. [prevallence, Fr. prevallencia, low Lat.] PREVALENCY. } Superiority; influence; predominance.
The duke better knew, what kind of arguments were of prevallence with him. Clarendon.
Others finding that, in former times, many churchmen were employed in the civil government, imputed their wanting of these ornaments their predecessors wore, to the power and prevallency of the lawyers. Clarendon.
Animals, whose forelegs supply the use of arms, hold, if not an equality in both, a prevallency oft times in the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- Why, fair one, would you not rely On reason's force with beauty's join'd;
Could I their prevallence deny,
I must at once be deaf and blind. Prior.
Least of all does this precept imply, that we should comply with any thing that the prevallence of corrupt fashion has made reputable. Rogers's Sermons.
- PREVALENT. adj. [prevallens, Lat.] Victorious; gaining superiority.
Brennus told the Roman ambassadors, that prevallent arms were as good as any title, and that valiant men might account to be their own as much as they could get. Raleigh.
On the foughten field,
Michael and his angels prevallent encamping. Milton.
The conduct of a peculiar providence made the instruments of that great design prevallent and victorious, and all those mountains of opposition to become plains. South's Sermons.
2. Predominant; powerful.
Eve! easily may faith admit, that all
The good which we enjoy, from heav'n descends;
But, that from us ought should ascend to heav'n,
So prevallent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-bless'd; or to incline his will;
Hard to belief may seem. Milton's Par. Lost.
This was the most received and prevallent opinion, when I first brought my collection up to London. Woodward.
- PREVALENTLY. adv. [from prevallent.] Powerfully; forcibly.
The evening-star so falls into the main,
To rise at morn more prevallently bright. Prior.
- To PREVARIATE. v. n. [prevariator, Lat. prevariarier, Fr.] To cavil; to quibble; to shuffle.
Laws are either disannulled or quite prevariated through change and alteration of times, yet they are good in themselves. Spenser.
He prevariates with his own understanding, and cannot seriously consider the strength, and discern the evidence of arguments against his desires. South.
Whoever helped him to this citation, I desire he will never trust him more; for I would think better of himself, than that he would wilfully prevariate. Stillingfleet.
- PREVARICATION. n. f. [prevariatio, Lat. prevariation, Fr. from prevariate.] Shuffle; cavil.
Several Romans, taken prisoners by Hannibal, were released upon obliging themselves by an oath to return again to his camp: among these was one, who, thinking to elude the oath, went the same day back to the camp, on pretence of having forgot something; but this prevariation was so shocking to the Roman senate, that they ordered him to be delivered up to Hannibal. Addison's Freeholder.
- PREVARICATOR. n. f. [prevariator, Lat. prevariateur, Fr. from prevariate.] A caviller; a shuffler.
PREVENTIVE. adj. [preveniens, Lat.] Preceding; going before; preventive.
From the mercy-seat above
Prevenient grace descending, had remov'd
The stony from their hearts, and made new flesh Regenerate grow instead. Milton's Par. Lost.
To PREVENT. v. a. [prevenio, Lat.] To hinder.
If thy indulgent care
Had not prevent'd, among unbody'd shades
I now had wander'd. Philips.

PRE

- To PREVENT. v. a. [prævenio, Lat. prevenir, Fr.]
 1. To go before as a guide; to go before, making the way easy.
 Are we to forsake any true opinion, or to shun any requisite action, only because we have in the practice thereof been prevented by idolaters. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
 Prevent him with the blessings of goodness. Psalms xxi. 3.
 Prevent us, O Lord, in all our doings with thy most gracious favour. Common Prayer.
 Let thy grace, O Lord, always prevent and follow us. Common Prayer.
 2. To go before; to be before; to anticipate.
 Mine eyes prevent the night-watches, that I might be occupied in thy words. Psalms cxix. 4.
 The same officer told us, he came to conduct us, and that he had prevented the hour, because we might have the whole day before us for our business. Bacon.
 Nothing engendered doth prevent his meat:
 Flies have their tables spread, ere they appear;
 Some creatures have in winter what to eat;
 Others do sleep. Herbert's Temple of Sacred Poems.
 Soon shalt thou find, if thou but arm their hands,
 Their ready guilt preventing thy commands;
 Couldst thou some great proportion'd mischief frame,
 They'd prove the father from whose loins they came, Pope.
 3. To preoccupy; to preengage; to attempt first.
 Thou hast prevented us with offerings of love, even when we were thine enemies. King Charles.
 4. To hinder; to obviate; to obstruct. This is now almost the only sense.
 They prevented me in the day of my trouble; but the Lord was my upholder. Psalms xviii. 18.
 I do find it cowardly and vile,
 For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
 The time of life. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
 This your sincerest care could not prevent,
 Foretold so lately what would come to pass. Milton.
 Too great confidence in success is the likeliest to prevent it; because it hinders us from making the best use of the advantages which we enjoy. Atterbury.
 To PREVENT. v. n. To come before the time. A latinism.
 Strawberries watered with water, wherein hath been steeped sheep's dung, will prevent and come early. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 PREVENTER. n. f. [from prevent.]
 1. One that goes before.
 The archduke was the assailant, and the preventer, and had the fruit of his diligence and celerity. Bacon.
 2. One that hinders; an hinderer; an obstructer.

Prime all your firelocks, fasten well the stake. Gay.

His friendship was exactly tim'd,

He shot before your foes were prim'd. Swift's Miscel.

2. [Primer, Fr. to begin.] To lay the first colours on in painting. A Gallicism.

PRIMELY. adv. [from prime.]

1. Originally; primarily; in the first place; in the first intention.

Words signify not immediately and primely things themselves, but the conceptions of the mind about them. South.

2. Excellently; supremely well. A low sense.

PRIMENESS. n. f. [from prime.]

1. The state of being first.

2. Excellence.

PRIMER. n. f.

1. An office of the blessed Virgin.

Another prayer to her is not only in the manual, but in the primer or office of the blessed Virgin. Stillingfleet.

2. [Primer, Lat.] A small prayer book in which children are taught to read, so named from the Romish book of devotions; an elementary book.

The Lord's prayer, the creed and ten commandments

he should learn by heart, not by reading them himself in his primer, but by somebody's repeating them before he can read. Locke on Education.

PRIMERO. n. f. [Spanish.] A game at cards.

I left him at primero

With the duke of Suffolk. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

PRIMEVAL. adj. [primævus, Lat.] Original; such as was

PRIMEVOUS. at first.

Immortal dove,

Thou with almighty energy did'st move

On the wild waves, incumbent did'st display

Thy genial wings, and hatch primeval day. Blackmore.

- The princely hierarch left his pow'rs to seize Possession of the garden. Milton.
 I expressed her commands
 To mighty lords and princely dames.
 So fled the dame, and o'er the ocean bore
 Her princely burthen to the Gallick shore. Waller.
 3. Becoming a prince; royal; grand; august.
 I, that but now refus'd most princely gifts,
 Am bound to beg of my lord general.
 Princely counsel in his face yet shone. Shakefp.
 Born to command, your princely virtues slept
 Like humble David's, while the flock he kept. Waller.
 PRINCELY. adv. [from prince.] In a princelike manner.
 PRINCE-FEATHER. n. f. The herb amaranth. Ainsl.
 PRINCESS. n. f. [from prince, Fr.]
 1. A sovereign lady; a woman having sovereign command.
 Ask why God's anointed he revild;
 A king and princess dead. Dryden.
 Princess ador'd and lov'd, if verse can give A deathless name, thine shall for ever live. Granvil.
 Under so excellent a princess as the present queen, we suppose a family strictly regulated.
 2. A sovereign lady of rank, next to that of a queen.
 3. The daughter of a king.
 Here the bracelet of the truest princess,
 That ever swore her faith. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
 4. The wife of a prince: as, the princess of Wales.
 PRINCIPAL. adj. [from princeps, Fr. principalis, Lat.]
 1. Principally. A sense found only in Spenser. A Latinism.
 Suspicion of friend, nor fear of foe,
 That hazarded his health, had he at all;
 But walk'd at will, and wandred to and fro,
 In the pride of his freedom principal. Spenser.
 2. Chief; of the first rate; capital; essential; important; considerable.
 This later is ordered, partly and as touching principal matters by none but precepts divine only; partly and as concerning things of inferior regard by ordinances, as well human as divine. Hooker, b. v. f. 4.
 Can you remember any of the principal evils, that he laid to the charge of women. Shakefp. As You like it.
 PRINCIPAL. n. f. [from the adj.]
 1. A head; a chief; not a second.
 Seconds in factions do many times, when the faction subdivideth, prove principals. Bacon.
 2. One primarily or originally engaged; not an accessory or auxiliary.
 We were not principals, but auxiliaries in the war. Swift.
 In judgment, some persons are present as principals, and others only as accessories. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 3. A capital sum placed out at interest.
 Thou wilt not only loose the forfeiture,
 But touch'd with human gentleness and love,
 Forgive a moiety of the principal. Shakefp.
 Taxes must be continued, because we have no other means for paying off the principal. Swift's Miscellanies.
 4. The president or governor.
 PRINCIPALITY. n. f. [from principauté, Fr.]
 1. Sovereignty; supreme power.
 Divine lady, who have wrought such miracles in me, as to make a prince none of the basest, to think all principalities base, in respect of the shephoock. Sidney, b. ii.
 Nothing was given to Henry, but the name of king; all other absolute power of principality he had. Spenser.
 2. A prince; one invested with sovereignty.
 Then speak the truth by her; if not divine,
 Yet let her be a principality,
 Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth. Shakefp.
 Nitroch of principalities the prime. Milton.
 3. The country which gives title to a prince: as, the principality of Wales.
 To the boy Cæsar send this grizled head,
 And he will fill thy wishes to the brim
 With principalities. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.
 The little principality of Epire was invincible by the whole power of the Turks. Temple's Miscellanies.
 4. Superiority; predominance.
 In the chief work of elements, water hath the principality and excess over earth. Digby on Bodies.
 If any mystery be effective of spiritual blessings, then this is much more, as having the prerogative and principality above every thing else. Taylor's Worthing Communicant.
 PRINCIPALLY. adv. [from principal.] Chiefly; above all; above the rest.
 If the minister of divine offices shall take upon him that holy calling for covetous or ambitious ends, or shall not design the glory of God principally, he polluteh his heart. Taylor.
 They wholly mistake the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find fault.
 The resistance of water arises principally from the vis inertia of its matter, and by consequence, if the heavens were as dense as water, they would not have much less resistance than water. Newton's Opticks.

- What I principally insist on, is due execution. Swift.
 PRINCIPALNESS. n. f. [from principal.] The state of being principal or chief.
 PRINCIPATION. n. f. [from principium, Lat.] Analysis into constituent or elemental parts. A word not received.
 The separating of any metal into its original or elemental, we will call principiation. Bacon.
 PRINCIPLE. n. f. [from principium, Lat. principe, Fr.]
 1. Element; constituent part; primordial substance.
 Modern philosophers suppose matter to be one simple principle, or solid extension diversified by its various shapes. Watts.
 2. Original cause.
 Some few, whose lamp shone brighter, have been led,
 From cause to cause to nature's secret head,
 And found that one first principle must be. Dryden.
 For the performance of this, a vital or directive principle seemeth to be assistant to the corporeal. Crew's Cognat.
 3. Being productive of other being; operative cause.
 The soul of man is an active principle, and will be employed one way or other. Tilleyson's Sermon.
 4. Fundamental truth; original postulate; first position from which others are deduced.
 Touching the law of reason, there are in it some things which stand as principles universally agreed upon; and out of those principles, which are in themselves evident, the greatest moral duties we owe towards God or man, may, without any great difficulty, be concluded. Hooker.
 All of them may be called principles, when compared with a thousand other judgments, which we form under the regulation of these primary propositions. Watts's Logic.
 5. Ground of action; motive.
 Farewell, young lords; these warlike principles
 Do not throw from you. Shakefp.
 As no principle of vanity led me first to write it, so much less does any such motive induce me now to publish it. Watts.
 There would be but small improvements in the world, were there not some common principle of action, working equally with all men. Addison's Spectator, N° 255.
 6. Tenet on which morality is founded.
 I'll try
 If yet I can subdue those stubborn principles Of faith, of honour. Addison's Cat.
 A feather shooting from another's head,
 Extracts his brain, and principle is fled. Pope.
 TO PRINCIPLE. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To establish or fix in any tenet; to impress with any tenet good or ill.
 Wildest and best men full oft beguill'd,
 With goodness principle'd not to reject
 The penitent, but ever to forgive, Milton.
 Are drawn to wear out miserable days.
 It is the concern of his majesty, and the peace of his government, that the youth be principled with a thorough persuasion of the justness of the old king's cause. South.
 There are so many young persons, upon the well and ill principling of whom next under God, depends the happiness or misery of this church and state. South's Sermons.
 Governors should be well principled and good-natured. Locke.
 Men have been principled with an opinion, that they must not consult reason in things of religion.
 Let an enthusiast be principled, that he or his teacher is inspired, and you in vain bring the evidence of clear reasons against his doctrine. Locke.
 He seems a settled and principled philosopher, thanking fortune for the tranquillity he has by her aversion. Pope to Swift.
 2. To establish firmly in the mind.
 The promiscuous reading of the bible is far from being of any advantage to children, either for the perfecting their reading, or principling their religion. Locke.
 PRINCOCK. n. f. [from prink or prim cock; perhaps præcox or PRINCOX.] præcoquum ingenium, Lat.] A coxcomb; a conceited person; a pert young rogue.
 You are a saucy boy;
 This trick may chance to scathe you I know what;
 You must contrary me! you are a princex, go. Shakefp.
 TO PRINK. v. n. [from prinken, Dutch.] To prink; to deck for show.
 Hold a good wager she was every day longer prinking in the glass than you was. Art of Tormanting.
 TO PRINT. v. a. [from primer, empreints, Fr.]
 1. To mark by pressing any thing upon another.
 On his fiery steed betimes he rode,
 That scarcely prints the turf on which he trod. Dryden.
 2. To impress any thing, so as to leave its form.
 3. To form by impression.
 Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince,
 For she did print your royal father off.
 Conceiving you. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
 Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you. Lev. ix. 28.
 Perhaps some footsteps printed in the clay,
 Will to my love direct your wand'ring way. Resurrection.

- His royal bounty brought its own reward;
 And in their minds so deep did print the sense,
 That if their ruins sadly they regard,
 'Tis but with fear. Dryden.
 4. To impress words or make books, not by the pen, but the press.
 Thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown and dignity, built a paper-mill. Shakefp.
 This nonsense got in by a mistake of the stage editors, who printed from the piecemeal written parts. Pope.
 Is it probable, that a promiscuous jumble of printing letter should often fall into a method, which should stamp on paper a coherent discourse. Locke.
 As soon as he begins to spell, pictures of animals should be got him, with the printed names to them. Locke.
 TO PRINT. v. n. To publish a book.
 From the moment he prints, he must expect to hear no more truth. Pope.
 PRINT. n. f. [from imprimere, Fr.]
 1. Mark or form made by impression.
 Some more time
 Must wear the print of his remembrance out. Shakefp.
 Abhorred slave,
 Which any print of goodness wilt not take,
 Being capable of all ill! Shakefp. Temp.
 Attend the foot,
 That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks. Shakefp.
 Up they toft the fand,
 No wheel seen, nor wheels print was in the mould impress'd Behind them. Chapman's Iliads.
 Our life so fast away doth slide,
 As doth an hungry eagle through the wind;
 Or as a ship transported with the tide,
 Which in their passage leave no print behind. Davies.
 My life is but a wind,
 Which passeth by, and leaves no print behind. Sandys.
 O'er the smooth enamell'd green,
 Where no print of step hath been. Milton.
 While the heav'n, by the sun's team untrod,
 Hath took no print of the approaching light,
 And all the spangled host keep watch.
 Before the lion's den appeared the footsteps of many that had gone in, but no prints of any that ever came out. South.
 Winds bear me to some barren island,
 Where print of human feet was never seen. Dryden.
 From hence Altea took her flight, and here
 The prints of her departing steps appear. Dryden.
 If they be not sometimes renewed by repeated exercise of the senses or reflection, the print wears out. Locke.
 2. That which being impressed leaves its form.
 3. Pictures cut in wood or copper to be impressed on paper. It is usual to say wooden prints and copper plates.
 4. Picture made by impression.
 From my breast I cannot tear
 The passion, which from thence did grow;
 Nor yet out of my fancy raise
 The print of that suppoled face. Waller.
 The prints, which we see of antiquities, may contribute to form our genius, and to give us great ideas. Dryden.
 Words standing for things, should be expressed by little draughts and prints made of them. Locke.
 5. The form, size, arrangement, or other qualities of the types used in printing books.
 To refresh the former hint;
 She read her maker in a fairer print. Dryden.
 The state of being published by the printer.
 I love a ballad in print, or a life. Shakefp.
 It is so rare to see
 Ought that belongs to young nobility
 In print, that we must praise. Sackling.
 His natural antipathy to a man, who endeavours to signalize his parts in the world, has hindered many persons from making their appearance in print. Addison.
 I published some tables, which were out of print. Arbut.
 The rights of the christian church are scornfully trampled on in print. Atterbury.
 7. Single sheet printed and fold.
 The prints, about three days after, were filled with the same terms. Addison.
 The publick had said before, that they were dull; and they were at great pains to purchase room in the prints, to testify under their hands the truth of it.
 Inform us, will the emperor treat,
 Or do the prints and papers lie? Pope.
 8. Formal method.
 Lay his head sometimes higher, sometimes lower, that he may not feel every little change, who is not designed to have his maid lay all things in print, and tuck him in warm. Locke.
 PRINTER. n. f. [from print.]
 1. One that prints books.
 I find, at reading all over, to deliver to the printer, in that which I ought to have done to comply with my design, I am fallen very short. Digby.

- To buy books, only because they were published by an eminent printer, is much as if a man should buy cloaths that did not fit him, only because made by some famous tailor. Pope.
 See, the printer's boy below;
 Ye hawkers all, your voices lift. Swift.
 2. One that stains linen.
 PRINTLESS. adj. [from print.] That which leaves no impression.
 Ye elves,
 And ye, that on the sands with printless foot
 Do chafe the ebbing Neptune. Shakefp. Temp.
 Whilst from off the waters fleet,
 Thus I set my printless feet
 O'er the cowlip's velvet head,
 That bends not as I tread. Milton.
 PRIOR. adj. [from prior, Lat.] Former; being before something else; antecedent; anterior.
 Whenever tempted to do or approve any thing contrary to the duties we are enjoined, let us reflect that we have a prior and superior obligation to the commands of Christ. Rogers.
 PRIOR. n. f. [from prior, Fr.]
 1. The head of a convent of monks, inferior in dignity to an abbot.
 Neither she, nor any other, besides the prior of the convent, knew any thing of his name. Addison's Spectator.
 2. Prior is such a person, as, in some churches, presides over others in the same churches. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 PRIORESS. n. f. [from prior.] A lady superior of a convent of nuns.
 When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men,
 But in the presence of the prioress. Shakefp.
 The reeve, miller and cook are distinguished from each other, as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad speaking wife of Bath. Dryden.
 PRIORITY. n. f. [from prior, adj.]
 1. The state of being first; precedence in time.
 From son to son of the lady, as they should be in priority of birth. Hayward.
 Men still affirm, that it killeth at a distance, that it poisoneth by the eye, and by priority of vision.
 This observation may assist, in determining the dispute concerning the priority of Homer and Hesiod. Broome.
 Though he oft renew'd the fight,
 And almost got priority of fight,
 He ne'er could overcome her quite. Swift.
 2. Precedence in place.
 Follow, Cominius, we must follow you,
 Right worthy your priority. Shakefp.
 PRIORSHIP. n. f. [from prior.] The state or office of prior.
 PRIORY. n. f. [from prior.]
 1. A convent, in dignity below an abbey.
 Our abbies and our priories shall pay
 This expedition's charge. Shakefp. King John.
 2. Priories are the churches which are given to priors in titulum, or by way of title. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 PRISAGE. n. f. [from prisa.]
 Prisa, now called butlerage, is a custom whereby the prince challenges out of every bark laden with wine, containing less than forty tuns, two tuns of wine at his price. Cowell.
 PRISM. n. f. [from prisme, Fr. πρίσμα.]
 A prism of glass is a glass bounded with two equal and parallel triangular ends, and three plain and well polished sides, which meet in three parallel lines, running from the three angles of one end, to the three angles of the other end. Newton's Opticks.
 Here, awful Newton, the dissolving clouds Form fronting, on the sun, thy showery prism. Thomson.
 PRISMATICK. adj. [from prismatique, Fr. from prisma.] Formed as a prism.
 If the mass of the earth was cubick, prismatick, or any other angular figure, it would follow, that one, too vast a part, would be drowned, and another be dry. Derham.
 False eloquence, like the prismatick glass,
 Its gaudy colours spreads on every place;
 The face of nature we no more survey,
 All glares alike, without distinction gay. Pope.
 PRISMATICALLY. adv. [from prismatique.] In the form of a prism.
 Take notice of the pleasing variety of colours exhibited by the triangular glass, and demand what addition or decrement of either salt, sulphur or mercury befalls the glass, by being prismatically figured; and yet it is known, that without that shape, it would not afford those colours as it does. Boyle.
 PRISMOID. n. f. [from πρίσμα and ειδός.] A body approaching to the form of a prism.
 PRISON. n. f. [from prison, Fr.] A strong hold in which persons are confined; a goal.
 He hath commision
 To hang Cordelia in the prison. Shakefp. King Lear.
 I thought

PRI

- For those rebellious here their pris'n ordain'd. Milton.
I thought our utmost good
Was in one word of freedom understood,
The fatal blessing came; from prison free,
I starve abroad, and lose the sight of Emily.
Unkind! can you, whom only I adore,
Set open to your slave the prison door. Dryden.
The tyrant Æolus,
With pow'r imperial, curbs the struggling winds,
And founding tempests in dark prisons binds. Dryden.
He, that has his chains knocked off, and the prison doors set open to him, is presently at liberty. Locke.
To PRISON. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To imprison; to shut up in hold; to restrain from liberty.
2. To captivate; to enchain.
Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs,
They, as they fang, would take the prison d' soul, Milton.
And lap it in Elysiun.
3. To confine.
Universal plodding prisons up
The humble spirits in the arteries. Shakespeare.
Then did the king enlarge
The spleen he prison'd. Chapman's Iliads.
PRISON. n. f. A kind of rural play, commonly called prisoners.
The spachies of the court play every friday at ciocho di canni, which is no other than prison upon horseback, hiting one another with darts, as the others do with their hands. Sandy's Travels.
PRISONER. n. f. [from prisoner, Fr.]
1. One who is confined in hold.
Cesar's ill-erected tower,
To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
Is doomed a prisoner. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
The most pernicious infection, next the plague, is the smell of the jail, when prisoners have been long and close, and naftily kept. Bacon.
He that is tied with one slender string, such as one resolute struggle would break, he is prisoner only to his own sloth, and who will pity his thraldom. Decay of Piety.
A prisoner is troubled, that he cannot go whither he would;
and he that is at large is troubled, that he does not know whither to go. L'Estrange.
2. A captive; one taken by the enemy.
So oft as homeward I from her depart,
I go like one that having lost the field,
Is prisoner led away with heavy heart. Spenser.
There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, the taking of the Spanish general d'Ocampo prisoner, with the loss of few of the English. Bacon.
He yielded on my word,
And as my prisoner, I restore his sword. Dryden.
3. One under an arrest.
Tribune, a guard to seize the empress straight,
Secure her person prisoner to the state. Dryden.
PRISON. n. f. Gaol; hold in which one is confined.
I am forbid to tell the secrets of my prison house. Shakespeare.
PRISONMENT. n. f. [from prison.] Confinement; imprisonment; captivity.
May be he will not touch young Arthur's life,
But hold himself safe in his prisonment. Shakespeare.
PRISTINE. adj. [from pristinus, Lat.] First; ancient; original.
Now their pristine worth
The Britons recolled. Phillips.
This light being trajected only through the parallel super-ficies of the two prisms, if it suffered any change by the refraction of one superficies, it lost that impression by the contrary refraction of the other superficies, and so, being restored to its pristine constitution, became of the same nature and condition as at first. Newton's Opticks.
PRITHEE. A familiar corruption of pray thee, or I pray thee, which some of the tragick writers have injudiciously used.
Well, what was that scream for, I prithee? L'Estrange.
Alas! why com'st thou at this dreadful moment,
To shock the peace of my departing soul?
Away! I prithee leave me! Rome's Jane Shore.
PRIVACY. n. f. [from privatus.]
1. State of being secret; secrecy.
2. Retirement; retreat.
Clamours our privacies uneasy make, Birds leave their nests disturb'd, and beasts their haunts forfake. Dryden.
3. [From privatus, Fr.] Privacy; joint knowledge; great familiarity. Privacy in this sense is improper.
You see Frog is religiously true to his bargain, scorns to hearken to any composition without your privacy. Arbutnot.
4. Taciturnity. Ainsworth.
PRIVADO. n. f. [Spanish.] A secret friend.
The lady Brampton, an English lady, embarked for Portugal at that time, with some privado of her own. Bacon.
PRIVATE. adj. [from privatus, Lat.]
1. Not open; secret.
You shall go with me;
I have some private schooling for you. Shakespeare.

- Fancy retires
Into her private cell, when nature rests. Milton.
The harmless freedom, and the private friend. Anon.
2. Alone; not accompanied.
3. Being upon the same terms with the rest of the community; particular: opposed to publick.
When publick consent of the whole hath established any thing, every man's judgment, being thereunto compared, were not private, howsoever his calling be to some kind of publick charge; so that of peace and quietness there is not

He fues
To let him breathe between the heav'ns and earth,
A private man in Athens. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.
What infinite heartsease must kings neglect,
That private men enjoy? and what have kings,
That private have not too, save ceremony? Shakespeare.
Peter was but a private man, and not to be any way compared with the dukes of his house. Peacham of Antiquities.
The first principles of christian religion should not be faced with school points and private tenets. Sanderson.
Dare you,
A private man presume to love a queen. Dryden.
4. Particular; not relating to the publick.
My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.
5. In PRIVATE. Secretly; not publicly; not openly.
In private grieve, but with a careless scorn;
In publick seem to triumph, not to mourn. Granville.
PRIVATE. n. f. A secret message.
His private with me of the dauphin's love,
Is much more general than these lines import. Shakespeare.
PRIVATEER. n. f. [from privatus.] A ship fitted out by private men to plunder enemies.
He is at no charge for a fleet, further than providing privateers, wherewith his subjects carry on a pyrrical war at their own expence. Swift's Miscellanies.
To PRIVATEER. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit out ships against enemies, at the charge of private persons.
PRIVATELY. adv. [from privatus.] Secretly; not openly.
There, this night,
We'll pass the business privately and well. Shakespeare.
And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately. Mat. xxiv. 3.
PRIVATENESS. n. f. [from privatus.]
1. The state of a man in the same rank with the rest of the community.
2. Secrecy; privacy.
Ambassadors attending the court in great number, he did content with courtesy, reward and privateness. Bacon.
3. Obscurity; retirement.
He drew him into the fatal circle from a resolved private-ness, where he bent his mind to a retired course. Wotton.
PRIVATION. n. f. [from privatio, Fr. privatio, Lat.]
1. Removal or destruction of any thing or quality.
For, what is this contagious sin of kind,
But a privation of that grace within. Davies.
So bounded are our natural desires,
That wanting all, and setting pain aside,
With bare privation sense is satisfy'd. Dryden.
After some account of good, evil will be known by consequence, as being only a privation or absence of good. South.
A privation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or horse is deaf or dead, or a physician or divine un-learned; these are privations. Watts's Logic.
2. The act of the mind by which, in considering a subject, we separate it from any thing appendant.
3. The act of degrading from rank or office.
If part of the people or estate be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.
If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but less good; for the flower or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.
PRIVATIVE. adj. [from privatus, Fr. privativus, Lat.]
1. Causing privation of any thing.
2. Consisting in the absence of something; not positive. Priv-ative is in things, what negative is in propositions.
The impression from privative to active, as from silence to noise, is a greater degree than from less noise to more. Bacon.
The very privative blessings, the blessings of immunity, safeguard, liberty and integrity, which we enjoy, deserve the thanksgiving of a whole life. Taylor.
PRIVATIVE. n. f. That of which the essence is the absence of something, as silence is only the absence of sound.
Harmonical sounds and discordant sounds are both active and positive, but blackness and darkness are indeed but priv-ative, and therefore have little or no activity; somewhat they do contristate, but very little. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
PRIVATIVELY.

PRI

- PRIVATIVELY*. adv. [from privative.] By the absence of something necessary to be present; negatively.
The duty of the new covenant is set down, first privatively, not like that of Mosaic observances external, but positively, laws given into the minds and hearts. Hammond.
PRIVATIVENESS. n. f. [from privatus.] Notation of absence of something that should be present.
PRIVET. n. f. The leaves grow by pairs opposite to each other;
the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulous, and divided at the top into five segments; the ovary in the center of the flower-cup becomes a globular soft fruit full of juice, in which are lodged four seeds. Miller.
PRIVET. n. f. Evergreen. It is distinguished from the phillyrea by the leaves being placed alternately upon the branches, whereas those of the phillyrea are produced by pairs opposite to each other: it hath three feeds inclosed in each berry, whereas the phillyrea has but one. Miller.
PRIVILEGE. n. f. [from privilegium, Lat.]
1. Peculiar advantage.
Here's my sword,
Behold it is the privilege of mine honours,
My oath, and my profession. Shakespeare.
He went
Invisible, yet stay'd, such privilege
Hath omnipotence. Milton.
He claims his privilege, and says 'tis fit,
Nothing should be the judge of wit, but wit. Denham.
Smiles, not allow'd to beasts, from reason move,
And are the privilege of human love. Dryden.
The privilege of birth-right was a double portion. Locke.
2. Immunity; publick right.
I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakespeare.
A soul that can securely death defy,
And counts it nature's privilege to die. Dryden.
To PRIVILEGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To invest with rights or immunities; to grant a privilege.
The great are privileg'd alone,
To punish all injustice but their own. Dryden.
He happier yet, who privileg'd by fate
To shorter labour, and a lighter weight,
Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,
Ordain'd to-morrow to return to death. Prior.
2. To exempt from censure or danger.
The court is rather deemed as a privileged place of unbridled licentiousness, than as the abiding of him, who, as a father, should give a fatherly example. Sidney, b. ii.
He took this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands. Shakespeare.
This place
Doth privilege me, speak what reason will. Daniel.
3. To exempt from paying tax or impost.
Many things are by our laws privileged from tythes, which by the canon law are chargeable. Hale.
PRIVILEGE. adv. [from privus.] Secretly; privately.
They have the profits of their lands by pretence of conveyances thereof unto their privy friends, who privily send them the revenues. Spenser's State of Ireland.
PRIVILEGE. n. f. [from privatus, Fr. from privus.]
1. Private communication.
I will unto you in privilege discover the drift of my purpose;
I mean thereby to settle an eternal peace in that country, and also to make it very profitable to her majesty. Spenser.
2. Confidentiality; joint knowledge; private concurrence.
The authority of higher powers have force even in these things which are done without their privilege, and are of mean reckoning. Hooker, b. i. f. 7.
Upon this French going out, took he upon him,
Without the privilege o' th' king, to appoint
Who should attend him? Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
All the doors were laid open for his departure, not without the privilege of the prince of Orange, concluding that the kingdom might better be settled in his absence. Swift.
3. [In the plural.] Secret parts.
Few of them have any thing to cover their privities. Abbot.
PRIVY. adj. [from privus, Fr.]
1. Private; not publick; assigned to secret uses.
The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize on half his goods; the other half Comes to the privy coffer of the state. Shakespeare.
2. Secret; clandestine.
He took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, inasmuch that the bruit of his manliness was spread every where. Mac. viii. 7.
3. Secret; not shown.
The sword of the great men that are slain entereth into their privy chamber. Ezek. xxii. 14.
4. Admitted to secrets of state.
The king has made him
One of the privy council. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
One, having let his beard grow from the martyrdom of king Charles I. till the restoration, desired to be made a privy councillor. Speclator, N<sup>o</sup> 629.

PRO

5. Conscious to any thing; admitted to participation of knowledge.
Sir Valentine
This night intends to steal away your daughter;
Myself am one made privy to the plot. Shakespeare.
Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel.
He would rather lose half of his kingdom, than be privy to such a secret, which he commanded me never to mention.
Gulliver's Travels.
PRIVY. n. f. Place of retirement; necessary house.
Your fancy
Would still the same ideas give ye,
As when you spy'd her on the privy. Swift.
PRIZE. n. f. [from præ, Fr.]
1. A reward gained by contest with competitors.
If ever he go alone, I'll never wrestle for prize. Shakespeare.
I fought and conquer'd, yet have lost the prize. Dryden.
The raising such silly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such useless accomplishments, and inspiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority, has in it something immoral as well as ridiculous. Addison.
2. A reward gained by any performance.
True poets empty fame and praise despise,
Fame is the trumpet, but your smile the prize. Dryden.
3. [From præ, Fr.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.
The king of Scots he did send to France,
To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings,
And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
As is the oozy bottom of the sea. Shakespeare, Henry V.
With funken wreck. Shakespeare, Henry V.
He acquitted himself like a valiant, but not like an honest man; for he converted the prizes to his own use. Arbutnot.
Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
Soon to obtain and long possess the prize:
The pow'r's gave ear. Pope.
To PRIZE. v. a. [from apprais; priser, Fr. apprécier, Lat.]
1. To rate; to value at a certain price.
Life I prize not a straw; but for mine honour
Which I would free. Shakespeare.
Cast it unto the potter; a goodly price that I was prized at of them. Zech. xi. 13.
2. To esteem; to value highly.
I go to free us both of pain;
I prize d' your person, but your crown disdain. Dryden.
Some the French writers, some our own despise;
The ancients only, or the moderns prize. Pope.
PRIZER. n. f. [from priser, Fr. from prize.] He that values.
It holds its estimate and dignity,
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself,
As in the prizer. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.
PRIZE. n. f. [from prize and fighter.] One that fights publickly for a reward.
Martin and Crambe engaged like prizefighters. Arb. and Po.
In fig the prizefighter by day delight. Brampton.
PRO. [Latin.] For; in defence of; pro and con, for pro and contra, for and against. Despicable cant.
Doctrinal points in controversy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had used to be; and thence the animosity increased in books pro and con. Clarendon.
Matthew met Richard, when
Of many knotty points they spoke,
And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.
PROBABILITY. n. f. [from probabilitas, Lat. probabilit, Fr. from probabile.] Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence arising from the preponderation of argument: it is less than moral certainty.
Probability is the appearance of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant; but appears for the most part to be so. Locke.
As for probabilities, what thing was there ever set down so agreeable with sound reason, but some probable shew against it might be made? Hooker's Preface.
If a truth be certain, and thwart interest, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability; nay, if it does not carry with it an impregnable evidence, it will go near to debate it to a downright fallacy. South's Sermons.
Though moral certainty be sometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful assent; yet it is also frequently used for a firm assent to a thing upon such grounds, as are fit fully to satisfy a prudent man.
Tillotson's Sermons.
For a perpetual motion, magnetical virtues are not without some strong probabilities of proving effectual. Wilkins.
PROBABLE. adj. [from probabile, Fr. probabilis, Lat.] Likely; having more evidence than the contrary.
The publick approbation, given by the body of this whole church unto those things which are established, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a necessary proof that they are not good it must give place. Hooker.

PRO

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought against it. South.
They assented to things, that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they converted, they merchandized upon a probable persuasion of the honesty and truth of those whom they corresponded with. South's Sermons.
PROBABLY. adv. [from probable.] Likely; in likelihood.
Distinguishing betwixt what may possibly, and what will probably be done. L'Estrange's Fables.
Our constitution in church or state could not probably have been long preserved, without such methods. Swift.
PROBAT. n. f. [Latin.] The proof of wills and testaments of persons deceased in the spiritual court, either in common form by the oath of the executor, or with witnesses. Diët.
PROBATION. n. f. [probatio, Lat. from probo, Lat. probation, Fr.]
1. Proof; evidence; testimony.
Of the truth herein,
This present object made probation. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
He was lapt in a most curious mantle, which, for more probation, I can produce. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.
2. The act of proving by ratiocination or testimony.
When these principles, what is, is, and it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be, are made use of in the probation of propositions, wherein are words standing for complex ideas, as man or horse, there they make men receive and retain falsehood for manifest truth. Locke.
3. [Probation, Fr.] Trial; examination.
In the practical part of knowledge, much will be left to experience and probation, whereunto indication cannot so fully reach. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
4. Trial before entrance into monastick life; noviciate.
I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof, in your days of probation, you have been a sharer. Pope to Swift.
PROBATIONARY. adj. [from probation.] Serving for trial.
PROBATIONER. n. f. [from probation.]
1. One who is upon trial.
Hear a mortal muse thy praise rehearse,
In no ignoble verse;
But such as thy own verse did practise here,
When thy first fruits of poetry were giv'n,
To make thyself a welcome inmate there;
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.
Build a thousand churches, where these probationers may read their wall lectures. Swift.
2. A novice.
This root of bitterness was but a probationer in the soil; and though it set forth some offsets to preserve its kind, yet Satan was fain to cherish them. Decay of Piety.
PROBATIONERSHIP. n. f. [from probationer.] State of being a probationer; noviciate.
He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to that state of mediocrity and probationership, he has been pleased to place us in here, wherein to check our over-confidence. Locke.
PROBATORY. adj. [from probo, Lat.] Serving for trial.
Job's afflictions were no vindictory punishments, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.
PROBATUM EST. A Latin expression added to the end of a receipt, signifying it is tried or proved.
Vain the concern that you express,
That uncall'd Alard will possess
Your house and coach both day and night,
And that Macbeth was haunted less
By Banquo's restless spirit:
Lend him but fifty louis d'or,
And you shall never see him more;
Take my advice probatum est?
Why do the gods indulge our store,
But to secure our rest. Prior.
PROBE. n. f. [from probo, Lat.] A slender wire by which surgeons search the depth of wounds.
I made search with a probe. Wise's Surgery.
PROBE-SCISSORS. n. f. [probe and scissor.] Scissors used to open wounds, of which the blade thrust into the orifice has a button at the end.
The sinus was snipt up with probe-scissors. Wise's Surgery.
TO PROBE. v. a. [probo, Lat.] To search; to try by an instrument.
Nothing can be more painful, than to probe and search a purulent old sore to the bottom. South's Sermons.
He'd raise a bluish, where secret vice he found;
And tickle, while he gently prob'd the wound. Dryden.
PROBITY. n. f. [probité, Fr. probitas, Lat.] Honesty; sincerity; veracity.
The truth of our Lord's ascension, might be deduced from the probité of the apostles. Fiddes's Sermons.
So near approach we their celestial kind,
By justice, truth, and probité of mind. Pope.
PROBLEM. n. f. [problema, Fr. πρόβλημα, Gr.] A question proposed.

PRO

The problem is, whether a man constantly and strongly believing, that such a thing shall be, it doth help any thing to the effecting of the thing. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Although in general one understood colours, yet were it not an easy problem to resolve, why grass is green? Brown.
This problem let philosophers resolve.
What makes the globe from West to East revolve. Blackm.
PROBLEMATICAL. adj. [from problem; problematique, Fr.] Uncertain; unsettled; disputed; disputable.
I promised no better arguments than might be expected in a point problematical. Boyle.
Diligent enquiries into remote and problematical guilt, leave a gate wide open to the whole tribe of informers. Swift.
PROBLEMATICALLY. adv. [from problematical.] Uncertainly.
PROBOSCIS. n. f. [proboscis, Lat.] A snout; the trunk of an elephant; but it is used also for the same part in every creature, that bears any resemblance therunto.
The elephant wreath'd to make them sport
His lithe proboscis. Milton.
PROCA'CIUS. adj. [procaz, Lat.] Petulant; loofe. Diët.
PROCA'CIETY. n. f. [from procaz.] Petulance. Diët.
PROCATARCTICK. adj. [προκαταρκτικός, Gr.] Forerunning; antecedent. See PROCATARXIS.
James IV. of Scotland, falling away in his flesh, without the precedence of any procatarctick cause, was suddenly cured by decharming the witchcraft. Harvey on Consumptions.
The physician enquires into the procatarctick causes. Harv.
PROCATARXIS. n. f. [προκαταρκσις, Gr.]
Procatarxis is the pre-existent cause of a disease, which co-operates with others that are subsequent, whether internal or external; as anger or heat of climate, which bring such an ill disposition of the juices, as occasion a fever: the ill disposition being the immediate cause, and the bad air the procatarctick cause. Quincy.
PROCEDURE. n. f. [procedure, Fr. from proceed.]
1. Manner of proceeding; management; conduct.
This is the true procedure of conscience, always supposing a law from God, before it lays obligation upon man. South.
2. Act of proceeding; progress; process; operation.
Although the distinction of these several procedures of the soul do not always appear distinct, especially in sudden actions, yet in actions of weight, all these have their distinct order and procedure. Hale's Origin of Morals.
3. Produce; thing produced.
No known substance, but earth and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any moss or herby substance. Bacon.
TO PROCEED. v. n. [procedo, Lat. procedo, Fr.]
1. To pass from one thing or place to another.
Adam
Proceeded thus to ask his heav'nly guest. Milton.
Then to the prelude of a war proceeds;
His horns, yet fore, he tries against a tree. Dryden.
I shall proceed to more complex ideas. Locke.
2. To go forward; to tend to the end designed.
Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
These things, when they proceed not, they go backward. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.
3. To come forth from a place or from a sender.
I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me. Jo. viii. 42.
4. To go or march in state.
He ask'd a clear stage for his muse to proceed in. Anon.
5. To issue; to arise; to be the effect of; to be produced from.
A dagger of the mind, a false creation Proceeding from the heat oppress'd brain. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
From me what proceed
But all corrupt, both mind and will both depriv'd. Milt.
All this proceeded not from any want of knowledge. Dryd.
6. To prosecute any design.
He that proceeds upon other principles, in his enquiry into any sciences, posits himself in a party. Locke.
Since husbandry is of large extent, the poet singles out such precepts to proceed on, as are capable of ornament. Addis.
7. To be transacted; to be carried on.
He will, after his four fashions tell you,
What hath proceeded worthy note to-day. Shakeſp.
8. To make progress; to advance.
Violence
Proceeded, and oppression and sword law
Through all the plain. Milton.
9. To carry on juridical process.
Proceed by process, left parties break out,
And sack great Rome with Romans. Shakeſp.
Instead of a ship, to levy upon his country such a sum of money for his majesty's use, with direction in what manner he should proceed against such as refused. Clarendon.
To judgment he proceeded on th' accus'd.
10. To transact; to act; to carry on any affair methodically.
From them I will not hide
My judgments, how with mankind I proceed;
As how with peccant angels late they faw. Milton.
How

PRO

How severely with themselves proceed,
The men who write such verse as who can read?
Their own strict judges, not a word they spare,
That wants or force, or light, or weight, or care. Pope.
11. To take effect; to have its course.
This rule only proceeds and takes place, when a person cannot of common law condemn another by his sentence. Ascham.
12. To be propagated; to come by generation.
From my loins thou shalt proceed. Milton.
13. To be produced by the original efficient cause.
O Adam, one Almighty is, from whom
All things proceed, and up to him return. Milton.
PROCEED. n. f. [from the verb.] Produce: as, the proceeds of an estate. Clarissa. Not an imitable word, though much used in law writings.
PROCEEDER. n. f. [from proceed.] One who goes forward; one who makes a progress.
He that seeketh victory over his nature, let him not set himself too great nor too small tasks; for the first will make him dejected by often failing; and the second will make him a small proceeder, though by often prevailings. Bacon.
PROCEEDING. n. f. [proceeds, Fr. from proceed.]
1. Progress from one thing to another; series of conduct; transaction.
I'll acquaint our duteous citizens,
With all your just proceedings in this case. Shakeſp.
My dear love
To your proceedings bids me tell you this. Shakeſp.
The understanding brought to knowledge by degrees, and, in such a general proceeding, nothing is hard. Locke.
It is a very unusual proceeding, and I would not have been guilty of it for the world. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
From the earliest ages of christianity, there never was a precedent of such a proceeding. Swift.
2. Legal procedure: as, such are the proceedings at law.
PROCE'LOUS. adj. [procellosus, Lat.] Tempestuous. Diët.
PROCE'PTION. n. f. Preconception; act of taking something sooner than another. A word not in use.
Having too little power to offend others, that I have none to preserve what is mine own from their proception. King Charles.
PROCE'RTY. n. f. [from procerus, Lat.] Tallness; height of stature.
We shall make attempts to lengthen out the humane figure, and restore it to its ancient procerity. Addison.
PROCE'SS. n. f. [proceſs, Fr. processus, Latin.]
1. Tendency; progressive course.
That there is somewhat higher than either of these two, no other proof doth need, than the very process of man's desire, which being natural should be frustrate, if there were not some farther thing wherein it might rest at the length contented, which in the former it cannot do. Hooker.
2. Regular and gradual progress.
Commend me to your honourable wife;
Tell her the process of Antonio's end;
Say how I lov'd you; speak me fair in death. Shakeſp.
They declared unto him the whole process of that war, and with what success they had endured. Knelles.
Immediate are the acts of God, more swift
Than time or motion; but to human ears
Cannot without process of speech be told. Milton.
Saturnian Juno
Attends the fatal process of the war. Dryden.
In the parable of the wasteful steward, we have a lively image of the force and process of this temptation. Rogers.
3. Course; continual flux or passage.
I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years; if in the course
And process of this time you can report,
And prove it too against mine honour aught, Turn me away. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.
This neither empire rise,
By policy and long process of time. Milton.
Many acts of parliament have, in long process of time, been lost, and the things forgotten. Hale's Law of England.
4. Methodical management of any thing.
Experiments, familiar to chymists, are unknown to the learned, who never read chymical processes. Boyle.
An age they live releas'd
From all the labour, process, clamour, woe,
Which our sad scenes of daily action know. Prior.
5. Course of law.
Proceed by process,
Left parties, as he is below'd, break out. Shakeſp.
All processes ecclesiastical should be made in the king's name, as in writs at the common law. Hayward.
The patricians they chose for their patrons, to answer for their appearance, and defend them in any process. Swift.
PROCESSION. n. f. [processio, Fr. processio, Lat.] A train marching in ceremonious solemnity.
If there be cause for the church to go forth in solemn procession, his whole family have such business come upon them, that no one can be spared. Hooker.
Him all his train
Follow'd in bright procession. Milton.

PRO

'Tis the procession of a funeral vow,
Which cruel laws to Indian wives allow. Dryden.
The priests, Potitus at their head,
In skins of beasts involv'd, the long procession led. Dryden.
When this vast congregation was formed into a regular procession to attend the ark of the covenant, the king marched at the head of his people, with hymns and dances. Addison.
It is to be hoped, that the persons of wealth, who made their procession through the members of these new erected seminaries, will contribute to their maintenance. Addison.
The Ethiopians held an annual sacrifice of twelve days to the Gods; all that time they carried their images in procession, and placed them at their festivals. Bryant.
TO PROCESSION. v. n. [from the noun.] To go in procession.
A low word.
PROCESSIONAL. adj. [from procession.] Relating to procession.
PROCESSIONARY. adj. [from procession.] Conflating in procession.
Rogations or litanies were then the very strength and comfort of God's church; whereupon, in the year 506, it was by the council of Aurelia decreed, that the whole church should bestow yearly at the feast of pentecost, three days in that processionary service. Hooker.
PROCHRONISM. n. f. [προχρονισμός, Gr.] An error in chronology; a dating a thing before it happened. Diët.
PRO'CIDENCE. n. f. [procidencia, Lat.] Falling down; dependence below its natural place.
PRO'CI'NT. n. f. [prociñtus, Lat.] Complete preparation; preparation brought to the point of action.
When all the plain
Cover'd with thick imbarr'd squadrons bright,
Chariots, and flaming arms, and fiery steeds,
Reflecting blaze on blaze, first met his view,
War he perceiv'd, war in prociñt. Milton.
TO PROCLAIM. v. a. [proclamo, Lat. proclaimer, Fr.]
1. To promulgate or denounce by a solemn or legal publication.
When thou comest nigh unto a city to fight against it, proclaim peace unto it. Deut. xx. 10.
I proclaim a liberty for you, faith the Lord, to the sword and to the pestilence. Jer. xxxiv. 17.
Heralds
With trumpet's sound, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council. Milton.
While in another's name you peace declare,
Princes, you in your own proclaim a war. Dryden.
She to the palace led her guest,
Then offer'd incense, and proclaim'd a feast. Dryden.
2. To tell openly.
Some prodigate wretches, were the apprehensions of punishments or shame taken away, would as openly proclaim their atheism, as their lives do. Locke.
While the deathless muse
Shall sing the just, shall o'er their head diffuse Perfumes with lavish hand, she shall proclaim Thy crimes alone. Prior.
3. To outlay by publick denunciation.
I heard myself proclaimed. Shakeſp.
PROCLAIMER. n. f. [from proclaim.] One that publishes by authority.
The great proclaimers, with a voice
More awful than the sound of trumpet, cry'd
Repentance, and heaven's kingdom nigh at hand
To all baptiz'd. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
PROCLAMATION. n. f. [proclamatio, Lat. proclamation, Fr. from proclaim.]
1. Publication by authority.
2. A declaration of the king's will openly published among the people.
If the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation against those proclamations. Clarendon.
PROCLIVITY. n. f. [proclivitas, proclivis, Lat.]
1. Tendency; natural inclination; propension; proneness.
The sensitive appetite may engender a proclivity to steal, but not a necessity to steal. Bramhall against Hobbs.
2. Readiness; facility of attaining.
He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness, that his brothers might keep pace with him. Watson.
PROCLIVOUS. adj. [proclivus, Lat.] Inclined; tending by nature. Diët.
PROCON'SUL. n. f. [Latin.] A Roman officer, who governed a province with consular authority.
Every child knoweth how dear the works of Homer were to Alexander, Virgil to Augustus, Ausonius to Gratian, who made him proconsul, Chaucer to Richard II. and Gower to Henry IV. Peacocks.
PROCON'SULSHIP. n. f. [from proconsul.] The office of a proconsul.
TO PROCRASTINATE. v. a. [procrastino, Lat.] To defer; to delay; to put off from day to day.
Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wind,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end. Shakeſp.
Lat

PRO

Let men seriously and attentively listen to that voice within them, and they will certainly need no other medium to convince them, either of the error or danger of thus procrastinating their repentance. Decay of Piety.

To PROCRAS'TINATE. v. n. To be dilatory.
I procrastinate more than I did twenty years ago, and have several things to finish, which I put off to twenty years hence. Swift to Pope.

PROCRAS'TINATION. n. f. [procras'tinatio, Lat. from procras'tinatus.] Delay; dilatoriness.
How desperate the hazard of such procrastination is, hath been convincingly demonstrated by better pens. D. of Piety.

PROCRAS'TINATOR. n. f. [from procras'tinate.] A dilatory person.
The temple haunting martlet, does approve
By his lov'd mansion, that heaven's breath Smells wooingly here: no jutting frieze,
But this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procrustean cradle. Shaksp.

To PROCREATE. v. a. [procreo, Lat. procreo, Fr.] To generate; to produce.
Flies crushed and corrupted, when inclosed in such vessels, did never procreate a new fly. Bentley.
Since the earth retains her fruitful power,
To procreate plants the forest to restore;
Say, why to nobler animals alone
Should she be feeble, and unfruitful grown. Blackmore.

PROCREATION. n. f. [procreation, Fr. procreatio, Lat. from procreare.] Generation; production.
The enclosed warmth, which the earth hath in itself, stirred up by the heat of the sun, assisteth nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties, which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Neither her outside form'd so fair, nor ought In procreation common to all kinds. Milton's Par. Lost.
Uncleanliness is an unlawful gratification of the appetite of procreation. South's Sermons.

PROCREATIVE. adj. [from procreate.] Generative; productive.
The ordinary period of the human procreative faculty in males is sixty-five, in females forty-five. Hale.

PROCREATIVENESS. n. f. [from procreative.] Power of generation.
These seem to have the accurs'd privilege of propagating and not expiring, and have reconciled the procreativeness of corporeal, with the duration of incorporeal substances. Decay of Piety.

PROCREATOR. n. f. [from procreate.] Generator; begetter.
PROCTOR. n. f. [contracted from procurator, Lat.]
1. A manager of another man's affairs.
The most clamorous for this pretended reformation, are either atheists, or else proctors suborned by atheists. Hooker.
2. An attorney in the spiritual court.
I find him charging the inconveniences in the payment of tythes upon the clergy and proctors. Swift.
3. The magistrate of the university.
To PROCTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To manage. A cant
word.
I cannot proctor mine own cause so well
To make it clear. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

PROCTORSHIP. n. f. [from proctor.] Office or dignity of a proctor.
From a scholar he became a fellow, and the president of the college, after he had received all the graces and degrees, the proctorship and the doctorship. Clarendon.

PROCURBENT. adj. [procumbens, Latin.] Lying down; prone.
PROCURABLE. adj. [from procure.] To be procured; obtainable; acquirable.
Though it be a far more common and procurable liquor than the infusion of lignum nephriticum, it may yet be easily substituted in its room. Boyle on Colours.

PROCURACY. n. f. [from procure.] The management of any thing.
PROCURA'TION. n. f. [from procure.] The act of procuring.
Those, who formerly were doubtful in this matter, upon strict and repeated inspection of these bodies, and procuracion of plain shells from this island, are now convinced, that these are the remains of sea-animals. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

PROCURATOR. n. f. [procurator, Fr. from procure, Lat.]
Manager; one who transacts affairs for another.
I had in charge at my depart from France,
As procurator for your excellence, Shaksp.
To marry princely Marg'ret for your grace.
They confirm and seal
Their undertaking with their dearest blood,
As procurators for the commonweal. Daniel.
When the procurators of King Antigonus imposed a rate upon the sick people, that came to Edepsum to drink the waters which were lately sprung, and were very healthful, they instantly dried up. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

PRO

PROCURATORIAL. adj. [from procurator.] Made by a proctor.
All procuratorial exceptions ought to be made before contestation of suit, and not afterwards, as being dilatory exceptions, if a proctor was then made and constituted. Ayliffe.

PROCURATORY. adj. [from procurator.] Tending to procura-
tion.
To PROCURE. v. a. [procure, Lat. procurer, Fr.]
1. To manage; to transact for another.
2. To obtain; to acquire.
They shall fear and tremble, for all the prosperity that I procure unto it. For. xxxiii. 9.
Happy though but ill,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe. Milton.
We no other pains endure,
Than those that we ourselves procure. Dryden.
Then by thy toil procur'd, thou food shalt eat. Dryden.

3. To persuade; to prevail on.
Is it my lady mother?
What unaccustom'd cause procures her hither? Shaksp.
Whom nothing can procure,
When the wide world runs bias, from his will
To writhe his limbs, and share, not mend the ill. Herbert.

4. To contrive; to forward.
Proceed, Salinus, to procure my fall,
And by the doom of death end woes and all. Shaksp.

To PROCURE. v. n. To bawd; to pimp.
Our author calls colouring, lena fororis, in plain English, the bawd of her sister, the design or drawing: the cloaths, the dresses her up, she paints her, she makes her appear more lovely than naturally she is, she procures for the design, and makes lovers for her. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
With what impatience must the muse behold,
The wife by her procuring husband sold. Dryden.

PROCURMENT. n. f. The act of procuring.
They mourn your ruin as their proper fate,
Cursing the empress; for they think it done
By her procurment. Dryden's Aurenga.

PROCURER. n. f. [from procure.]
1. One that gains; obtainer.
Angling was after tedious study, a moderator of passions, and a procurer of contentedness. Walton's Angler.
2. Pimp; pandar.
Strumpets in their youth, turn procurers in their age. South.

PROCURRESS. n. f. [from procure.] A bawd.
I saw the most artful procure's in town, seducing a young girl. Shaksp.

PRODIGAL. adj. [prodigus, Lat. prodigus, Fr.] Profuse; wasteful; expensive; lavish; not frugal; not parcimonious.
Least I should seem over prodigal in the praise of my countrymen, I will only present you with some few verses. Comd.
Be now as prodigal of all dear grace,
As nature was in making graces dear,
When she did starve the general world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you. Shaksp.
My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts,
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
Diogenes did beg more of a prodigal man than the rest;
whereupon one said, see your baseness, that when you find a liberal mind, you will take most of him; no, said Diogenes, but I mean to beg of the rest again. Bacon.
As a hero, whom his baser foes
In troops surround; now these affairs, now those,
Though prodigal of life, disdains to die
By common hands. Denham.
Here patriots live, who for their country's good,
In fighting fields were prodigal of blood. Dryden.
The prodigal of soul rush'd on the stroke
Of lifted weapons, and did wounds provoke. Dryden.
O! beware,
Great warrior, nor too prodigal of life,
Expose the British safety. Philips.
Some people are prodigal of their blood, and others so sparing, as if so much life and blood went together. Baker.

PRODIGAL. n. f. A waster; a spendthrift.
A beggar suddenly grown rich, becomes a prodigal; for to obscure his former obscurity, he puts on riot and excess. Benj. Johnson's Discovery.

Thou
Ow'st all thy losses to the fates; but I,
Like wasteful prodigals, have cast away
My happiness. Denham's Scylla.
Let the wasteful prodigal be slain.
PRODIGALITY. n. f. [prodigality, Fr. from prodigal.] Excessive; profusion; waste; excessive liberality.
A sweeter and lovelier gentleman,
Fram'd in the prodigality of nature, Shaksp.
The spacious world cannot again afford.
He that decries covetousness, should not be held an adversary to him that opposeth prodigality. Glavinil.

PRO

It is not always so obvious to distinguish between an act of liberality and act of prodigality. South's Sermons.
The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of his wit, though at the same time he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dry.

PRODIGALLY. adv. [from prodigal.] Profusely; wastefully;
extravagantly.
We are not yet so wretched in our fortunes,
Nor in our wills so lost, as to abandon
A friendship prodigally, of that price.
As is the senate and the people of Rome. B. Johnson.
I cannot well be thought so prodigally thirty of my subjects blood, as to venture my own life. King Charles.
The next in place and punishment are they,
Who prodigally throw their souls away;
Fools, who repining at their wretched fate,
And loathing anxious life, stubborn'd their fate. Dryden.
Nature not bounteous now, but lavish grows,
Our paths with flow'rs the prodigally strows. Dryden.

PRODIGIOUS. adj. [prodigi, ignis, Lat. prodigioux, Fr.] Amazing; astonishing; such as may seem a prodigy; portentous; enormous; monstrous; amazingly great.
If e'er he have a child, abortive be it,
Prodigious and untimely brought to light. Shaksp.
An emission of immoderate virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it being so prodigious; but that it is constantly avouched by many. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
It is prodigious to have thunder in a clear sky. Brown.
Then entering at the gate,
Conceal'd in clouds, prodigious to relate,
He mix'd, unmark'd, among the busy throng. Dryden.
The Rhone enters the lake, and brings along with it a prodigious quantity of water. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
It is a scandal to christianity, that in towns, where there is a prodigious increase in the number of houses and inhabitants, so little care should be taken for churches. Swift.

PRODIGIOUSLY. adv. [from prodigious.]
1. Amazingly; astonishingly; portentously; enormously.
I do not mean absolutely according to philo-sophick exact-ness infinite, but only infinite or innumerable as to us, or their number prodigiously great. Ray on the Creation.
2. It is sometimes used as a familiar hyperbole.
I am prodigiously pleased with this joint volume. Pope.

PRODIGIOUSNESS. n. f. [from prodigious.] Enormousness; portentousness; amazing qualities.

PRODIGY. n. f. [prodig, Fr. prodigium, Lat.]
1. Any thing out of the ordinary process of nature, from which omens are drawn; portent.
Be no more an exhal'd meteor,
A prodigy of fear, and a portent
Of broached mischief, to the unborn times. Shaksp.
The party opposite to our settlement, seem to be driven out of all human methods, and are reduced to the poor comfort of prodigies and old womens fables. Addison.

2. Monster.
Most of mankind, through their own sluggishness, become nature's prodigies, not her children. Benj. Johnson.

3. Any thing almonishing for good or bad.
They would seem prodigies of learning. Spektator.

PRODIGY. n. f. [prodigio, Lat.] Treason; treachery. Ann.
PRODIGY. n. f. [Latin.] A taylor. Not in use.
Piel'd priest, dost thou command me be shut out?
—I do, thou most usurping proditor. Shaksp.

PRODIGY. adj. [from proditor, Lat.]
1. Traytorous; treacherous; perfidious.
Now proditorious wretch! what hast thou done,
To make this barb'rous base assassinate? Daniel.
2. Apt to make discoveries.
Solid and conclusive characters are emergent from the mind, and start out of children when themselves least think of it;
for nature is proditorious. Wotton on Education.

To PRODUCCE. v. a. [produco, Lat. producere, Fr.]
1. To offer to the view or notice.
Produce your cause, faith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons. Isa. xli. 21.
2. To exhibit to the publick.
Your parents did not produce you much into the world, whereby you avoided many wrong steps. Swift.
3. To bring as an evidence.
It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place,
To be produc'd against the Moor. Shaksp. Othello.
4. To bear; to bring forth, as a vegetable.
This soil produces all sorts of palm-trees. Sandys.
5. To cause; to effect; to generate; to beget.
Somewhat is produced of nothing; for lyes are sufficient to breed opinion, and opinion brings on substance. Bacon.
They by imprudence mix'd
Produce prodigious births of body or mind. Milton.
Thou all this good of evil shalt produce. Milton.
Clouds may rain, and rain produce Fruits in her often'd soil. Milton.

PRO

Observing in ourselves, that we can at pleasure move feveral parts of our bodies; the effects also, that natural bodies are able to produce in one another, occurring every moment to our senses, we both these ways get the idea of power. Locke.
Hinder light but from striking on porphyre, and its colours vanish, it no longer produces any such ideas; upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again. Locke.
This wonder of the sculptor's hand
Produce'd, his art was at a stand. Addison.

PRODUCE. n. f. [from the verb.] This noun, though accented on the last syllable by Dryden, is generally accented on the former.
1. Product; that which any thing yields or brings.
You hoard not health for your own private use,
But on the publick spend the rich produce. Dryden.
2. Amount; profit; gain; emergent sum or quantity.
In Staffordshire, after their lands are marled, they sow it with barley, allowing three bushels to an acre. Its common produce is thirty bushels. Mortimer's Husbandry.
This tax has already been so often tried, that we know the exact produce of it. Addison's Freeholder, N° 20.

PRODUCE. n. f. [from produce.] One that exhibits; one that offers.
If an instrument be produced with a protestation in favour of the producer, and the adverse party does not contradict, it shall be construed to the advantage of the producer. Ayliffe.

PRODUCER. n. f. [from produce.] One that generates or produces.
By examining how I, that could contribute nothing to mine own being, should be here, I came to ask the same question for my father, and so am led in a direct line to a first producer that must be more than man. Sackling.
Whenever want of money, or want of desire in the consumer, make the price low, that immediately reaches the first producer. Locke.

PRODUCIBLE. adj. [from produce.]
1. Such as may be exhibited.
That is accounted probable, which has better arguments produced for it, than can be brought against it. South.
Many warm expressions of the fathers are producible in this case. Decay of Piety.
2. Such as may be generated or made.
The salts producible, are the alcalis or fixt salts, which seem to have an antipathy with acid ones. Boyle.

PRODUCIBLENESS. n. f. [from producible.] The state of being producible.
To confirm our doctrine of the producibility of salts, Hel-mont assures us, that by Paracelsus's sal circulatum solid bodies, particularly stones, may be transmuted into actual salt equiponderant. Boyle.

PRODUCT. n. f. [productus, Lat. produci, Fr.]
1. Something produced, as fruits, grain, metals.
The landholder, having nothing but what the product of his land will yield, must take the market-rate. Locke.
Our British products are of such kinds and quantities, as can turn the balance of trade to our advantage. Addison.
Range in the same quarter, the products of the same season. Spektator.

See thy bright altars
Heap'd with the products of Sabæan springs. Pope.
2. Work; composition.
Most of those books, which have obtained great reputation in the world, are the products of great and wise men. Watts.
3. Thing consequential; effect.
These are the product
Of those ill-mated marriages. Milton's Par. Lost.

PRODUCTILE. adj. [from produco, Lat.] Which may be produced.
PRODUCTION. n. f. [production, Fr. from produci.]
1. The act of producing.
A painter should foresee the harmony of the lights and shadows, taking from each of them that which will most conduce to the production of a beautiful effect. Dryden.
2. The thing produced; fruit; product.
The best of queens and best of herbs we owe
To that bold nation, which the way did show
To the fair region, where the sun does rise, Whole rich productions we so justly prize. Waller.
What would become of the scrupulous consumptive production, furnished by our men of wit and learning. Swift.

3. Composition.
We have had our names prefixed at length, to whole volumes of mean productions. Swift.

PRODUCTIVE. adj. [from produce.] Having the power to produce; fertile; generative; efficient.
In these
Not in themselves, all their known virtue appears Productive as in herb and plant. Milton.
This is turning nobility unto a principle of virtue, and making it productive of merit, as it is understood to have been originally a reward of it. Spektator, N° 537.
20 N B.

PRO

Be thou my aid, my tuneful song inspire,
And kindle, with thy own productive fire. Dryden.
If the productive fat of the marl be spent, it is not capable of being mended with new. Mortimer.
Numbers of Scots are glad to exchange their barren hills for our fruitful vales for productive of that grain. Swift.
Hymen's flames like stars unite,
And burn for ever one;
Chaste as cold Cynthia's virgin light, Productive as the sun. Pope.
Plutarch, in his life of Theseus, says, that that age was productive of men of prodigious stature. Breame.
PRO'EM. n. f. [πρόομιον; proemium, Lat. proeme, old Fr.]
Preface; introduction.
So glaz'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd. Milton.
Thus much may serve by way of proem.
Proceed we therefore to our poem. Swift's Miscel.
Justinian has, in the proem to the digests, only prefixed the term of five years for studying the laws. Ascham.
PROFANA'TION. n. f. [profanation, Fr. from profane, Lat.]
1. The act of violating any thing sacred.
He knew how bold men are to take even from God himself; how hardly that house would be kept from impious pro- fanation he knew. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
What I am and what I would, are to your ears, divinity;
to any others, profanation. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.
'Twere profanation of our joys,
To tell the laity our love. Donne.
All profanation and invasion of things sacred, is an offence against the eternal law of nature. South.
Others think I ought not to have translated Chaucer: they suppose a veneration due to his old language, and that it is little less than profanation and sacrilege to alter it. Dryden.
2. Irreverence to holy things or persons.
Great men may jest with faints, 'tis wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation. Shakespeare.
PROFANE. adj. [profane, Fr. from profanus, Lat.]
1. Irreverent to sacred names or things.
Profane fellow!
Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more
But what thou art besides, thou wert too base
To be his groom. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
These have caus'd the weak to stumble, and the profane to blaspheme, offending the one, and hardening the other. South.
2. Not sacred; secular.
The universality of the deluge is attested by profane history; for the fame of it is gone through the earth, and there are records or traditions concerning it in all the parts of this and the new-found world. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
3. Polluted; not pure.
Nothing is profane that serveth to holy things. Raleigh.
4. Not purified by holy rites.
Far hence be souls profane,
The Sibyl cry'd, and from the grove abstain. Dryden.
To PROFANE. v. a. [profane, Lat. profanar, Fr.]
1. To violate; to pollute.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this fort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaning this most honourable order. Shakespeare.
Forstaken fruit
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common and unhallow'd. Milton.
Pity the temple profan'd of ungodly men. 2 Mac. viii. 2.
How far have we
Profan'd thy heav'nly gift of poetry?
Made prostitute and profligate the muse,
Debas'd. Dryden.
2. To put to wrong use.
I feel me much to blame.
So idly to profane the precious time. Shakespeare.
PROFANELY. adv. [from profane.] With irreverence to sacred names or things.
I will hold my tongue no more, as touching their wickedness, which they profanely commit. 2 Esdr. xv. 8.
Let none of things serious, much less of divine,
When belly and head's full, profanely dispute. B. Johns.
That proud scholar, intending to erect altars to Virgil, speaks of Homer too profanely. Breame's Notes on the Odyssey.
PROFANER. n. f. [from profane.] Polluter; violator.
The argument which our Saviour useth against profaners of the temple, he taketh from the use whereunto it was with solemnity consecrated. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace,
Profaners of this neighbour stained steel. Shakespeare.
There are a lighter ludicrous sort of profaners, who use the scripture to furnish out their jests. Gov. of the Tongue.
PROFANENESS. n. f. [from profane.] Irreverence of what is sacred.
Apollo, pardon
My great profaneness 'gainst thy oracle! Shakespeare.
You can banish from thence scurrility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets and their actors. Dry-

To PROFESS. v. a. [profess, Fr. from professus, Lat.]
1. To declare himself in strong terms of any opinion or passion.
Would you have me speak after my custom,
As being a profess'd tyrant to their sex. Shakespeare.
Pretending first Wife to fly pain, professing next the spy. Milton.
A servant to thy sex, a slave to thee,
A foe profess'd to barren chastity. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
2. To make a show of any sentiments by loud declaration.
Love well your father;
To your professing bosoms I commit him. Shakespeare.
3. To declare publicly one's skill in any art or science, so as to invite employment.
What, matter, read you? first resolve me that.
—I read that I profess the art of love. Shakespeare.
Without eyes thou shalt want light; profess not the knowledge therefore that thou hast not. Eccles. iii. 25.
To PROFESS. v. n.
1. To declare openly.
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
They profess, that they know God, but in works they deny him. Tit. i. 16.
Profess unto the Lord, that I am come unto the country, which the Lord sware unto our fathers. Deutr. xvi. 3.
2. To declare friendship. Not in use.
As he does conceive,
He is dishonour'd by a man, which ever
Profess'd to him; why, his revenges must
In that be made more bitter. Shakespeare.
PROFESS'DLY. adv. [from profess'd.] According to open declaration made by himself.
I could not grant too much to men, that being profess'dly my subjects, pretended religious strictness. King Charles.
Virgil, whom he profess'dly imitated, has surpassed him among the Romans. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
England I travelled over, profess'dly teaching all places I pass'd along. Woodward.
PROFESSION. n. f. [profession, Fr. from professi.]
1. Calling; vocation; known employment.
I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than Your high profession spiritual. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
If we confound arts with the abuse of them, we shall condemn all honest trades; for there are that deceive in all pro- fessions, and bury in forgetfulness all knowledge. Raleigh.
Some of our profession keep wounds tented. Wiseham.
No other one race, not the sons of any one other pro- fession, nor perhaps altogether, are so much scattered amongst all professions, as the sons of clergymen. Sprat's Sermon.
This is a practice, in which multitudes, besides those of the learned professions, may be engaged. Watts.
2. Declaration.
A naked profession may have credit, where no other evidence can be given. Glanville's Scyl.
Most profligately false, with the strongest professions of sincerity. Swift.
3. The act of declaring one's self of any party or opinion.
For by oil in their lamps, and the first lighting of them, which was common to them both, is meant that solemn pro- fession of faith and repentance, which all christians make in baptism. Tillotson's Sermons.
When christianity came to be taken up, for the sake of those civil encouragements which attended their profession, the complaint was applicable to christians. Swift.
PROFESSIONAL. adj. [from profession.] Relating to a particular calling or profession.
Professional, as well as national, reflections are to be avoided. Clarissa.
PROFESSOR. n. f. [professor, Fr. from professi.]
1. One who declares himself of any opinion or party.
When the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed you may doubt the springing up of a new sect. Bacon's Essays.
2. One who publicly practises or teaches an art.
Professors in most sciences, are generally the worst qualified to explain their meanings to those who are not of their tribes. Swift.
3. One who is visibly religious.
Ordinary illiterate people, who were professors, that shew'd a concern for religion, seem'd much conversant in St. Paul's Epistles. Lake.
PROFESSORSHIP. n. f. [from professor.] The station or office of a public teacher.
Dr. Prideaux succeeded him in the professorship, being then elected bishop of Worcester, Sanderson succeeded him in the regius professorship. Warton.
To PROFFER.

PRO

To PROFFER. v. a. [profero, Lat. proferer, Fr.]
1. To propole; to offer.
To them that covet such eye-glutting gain,
Proffer thy gifts, and fitter servants entertain. Fairy Queen.
None, among the choice and prime
Of those heav'n-warring champions, could be found
So hardy as to proffer, or accept Alone, the dreadful voyage. Milton's Par. Lost.
Does Cato send this answer back to Cæsar,
For all his generous cares and proffer'd friendship. Addison.
2. To attempt.
PROFFER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Offer made; something proposed to acceptance.
Basilus, content to take that, since he could have no more, allow'd her reasons, and took her proffer thankfully. Sidney.
Proffer, not took, reap thanks for their reward. Shakespeare.
The king
Great proffers sends of pardon and of grace,
If they would yield, and quietness embrace. Daniel.
He made a proffer to lay down his commission of command in the army. Clarendon.
But these, nor all the proffers you can make,
Are worth the heifer which I set to flake. Dryden.
2. Effay; attempt.
It is done with time, and by little and little, and with many essays and proffers. Bacon's Essays.
PROFFERER. n. f. [from proffer.] He that offers.
Maids, in modesty, say no, to that
Which they would have the profferer construe ay. Shakespeare.
He who always refuses, taxes the profferer with indiscretion, and declares his assistance needless. Collier.
PROFICIENCY. n. f. [from proficere, Lat.] Profit; advance.
PROFICIENT. n. f. [from proficiens, Lat.] ment in any thing; improvement gained.
It is applied to intellectual acquisition.
Persons of ripe years, who flock'd into the church during the three first centuries, were obliged to pass through instructions, and give account of their proficiency. Addison.
Some reflecting with too much satisfaction on their own proficiencies, or presuming on their election by God, persuade themselves into a careless security. Rogers's Sermons.
PROFICIENT. n. f. [proficiens, Lat.] One who has made advances in any study or business.
I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language. Shakespeare.
I am dispos'd to receive further light in this matter, from those whom it will be no disparagement for much greater pro- ficients than I to learn. Boyle.
Young deathlings were, by practice, made
Proficients in their father's trade. Swift's Miscel.
PROFICUOUS. adj. [proficuous, Lat.] Advantageous; useful.
It is very proficuous, to take a good large dose. Harvey.
To future times
Proficuous, such a race of men produce,
As in the cause of virtue firm, may fix
Her throne inviolate. Philips.
PROFITE. n. f. [profite, Fr.] The side face; half face.
The painter will not take that side of the face, which has some notorious blemish in it; but either draw it in profile, or else shadow the more imperfect side. Dryden.
Till the end of the third century, I have not seen a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile, which gives us the view of a head very majestic. Addison.
PROFIT. v. a. [profit, Fr.]
1. Gain; pecuniary advantage.
Thou must know,
'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour. Shakespeare.
He thinks it highly just, that all rewards of trust, profit, or dignity should be given only to those, whose principles direct them to preserve the constitution. Swift.
2. Advantage; accession of good.
What profit is it for men now to live in heaviness, and after death to look for punishment? 2 Esdr. vii. 47.
Wisdom that is hid, and treasure that is hoarded up, what profit is in them both? Eccles. xi. 30.
Say not what profit is there of my service; and what good things shall I have hereafter. Eccles. xi. 23.
The king did not love the barren wars with Scotland, though he made his profit of the noise of them. Bacon.
3. Improvement; advancement; proficiency.
To PROFIT. v. a. [profit, Fr.]
1. To benefit; to advantage.
Whereto might the strength of their hands profit me. Job.
Let it profit thee to have heard,
By terrible example, the reward
Of disobedience. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
2. To improve; to advance.
'Tis a great means of profiting yourself, to copy diligently excellent pieces and beautiful designs. Dryden.
To PROFIT. v. n.
1. To gain advantage.
The Romans, though possess'd of their ports, did not profit much by trade. Arbutnot on Coins.

PRO

2. To make improvement.
Meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them;
that thy profiting may appear to all. 1 Tim. iv. 15.
She has profited so well already by your counsel, that the can say her lesson. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To be of use or advantage.
Oft times nothing pro-fits more;
Than self-esteem ground'd on just and right. Milton.
What profited thy thoughts, and toils, and cares,
In vigour more confirm'd, and riper years? Prior.
PROFITABLE. adj. [profitable, Fr. from profit.]
1. Gainful; lucrative.
A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man;
Is not so estimable or profitable,
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. Shakespeare.
The planting of hop-yards, sowing of wheat and rape-seed, are found very profitable for the planters, in places apt for them, and consequently profitable for the kingdom. Bacon.
2. Useful; advantageous.
To wail friends lost
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found. Shakespeare.
Then Judas, thinking indeed that they would be profitable in many things, granted them peace. 2 Mac. xii.
What was so profitable to the empire, became fatal to the emperor. Arbutnot on Coins.
PROFITABLENESS. n. f. [from profitable.]
1. Gainfulness.
2. Usefulness; advantageousness.
We will now briefly take notice of the profitableness of plants for physick and food. More's Antidote against Atheism.
What shall be the just portion of those, whom neither the condescension or kindness, nor wounds and sufferings of the son of God could persuade, nor yet the excellency, easiness and profitableness of his commands invite? Calamy's Sermons.
PROFITABLY. adv. [from profitable.]
1. Gainfully.
2. Advantageously; usefully.
You have had many opportunities to settle this reflection, and have profitably employed them. Wake.
PROFITLESS. adj. [from profit.] Void of gain or advantage.
We must not think the Turk is so unskilful,
To leave that latest, which concerns him first;
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain, Shakespeare.
To wake and wage a danger profitless.
PROFLIGATE. adj. [profligatus, Lat.] Abandoned; loiter to virtue and decency; shameless.
Time sensibly all things impairs;
Our fathers have been worse than theirs,
And we than ours; next age will see A race more profligate than we,
With all the pains we take, have skill enough to be. Resc.
How far have we
Prophan'd thy heav'nly gift of poetry?
Made prostitute and profligate the muse,
Debas'd to each obscene and impious use,
Whose harmony was first ordain'd above
For tongues of angels, and for hymns of love. Dryden.
Though Phalaris his brazen bull were there,
And he would dictate what he'd have you swear,
Be not so profligate, but rather chuse
To guard your honour, and your life to lose. Dryden.
Melancholy objects and subjects will, at times, impress the most profligate spirits. Clarissa.
PROFLIGATE. n. f. An abandoned shameless wretch.
It is pleasant to see a notorious profligate seized with a concern for his religion, and converting his spleen into zeal. Add.
I have heard a profligate offer much stronger arguments against paying his debts, than ever he was known to do against christianity; because he happened to be closer press'd by the bailliff than the parson. Swift's Miscellanies.
How could such a profligate as Antony, or a boy of eighteen, like Octavius, ever dare to dream of giving the law to such an empire and people. Swift.
To PROFLIGATE. v. a. [profligare, Lat.] To drive away. A word borrowed from the Latin without alteration of the sense, but not used.
Lavatories, to wash the temples, hands, wrists, and ju-gulars, do potentially profligate and keep off the venom. Harve.
PROFLIGATELY. adv. [from profligate.] Shamelessly.
Most profligately false, with the strongest professions of sincerity. Swift's Miscellanies.
PROFLIGATENESS. n. f. [from profligate.] The quality of being profligate.
PROFLUENCE. n. f. [from profuere.] Progress; course.
In the profluence or proceedings of their fortunes, there was much difference between them. Wotton.
PROFLUENT. adj. [from profuere, Lat.] Flowing forward.
Teach all nations what of him they learn'd,
And his salvation; them who shall believe Baptizing in the profuere stream, the sign
Of washing them from guilt of sin. Milton.
PROFOUND.

PRO

PROFOUND. adj. [profund, Fr. profundus, Lat.]

1. Deep; descending far below the surface; low with respect to the neighbouring places.

All else deep snow and ice,
A gulf profound, as that Serbonian bog
Betwixt Damietta and mount Casius old.
He hath hither thrust me down

Milton.

Into this gloom of Tartarus profound.

Milton.

2. Intellectually deep; not obvious to the mind; not easily fathomed by the mind; as, a profound treatise.

What words wilt thou use to move thy God to hear thee?
what humble gestures? what profound reverence?
Learned beyond the common reach; knowing to the bottom.
Not orators only with the people, but even the very profoundest disputers in all faculties, have hereby often, with the best learned, prevailed most.

Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

3. Lowly; humble; submiss; submissive.

The revolters are profound to make slaughter, though I have been a rebuker of them.

Hesley v. 2.

PROFOUND. n. f.

1. The deep; the main; the sea.

God, in the fathomless profound,
Hath all his choice commanders drown'd.
Now I die absent in the vast profound;
And me without myself the seas have drown'd.

Sandys.

2. The abyss.

If some other place th' ethereal king
Possesses lately, thither to arrive,
I travel this profound.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

To PROFOUND. v. n. [from the noun.] To dive; to penetrate. A barbarous word.

We cannot profound into the hidden things of nature, nor see the first springs that set the rest a-going.

Glanvil.

PROFOUNDLY. adv. [from profound.] 1. Deeply; with deep concern.

Why sigh you so profoundly?
The virgin started at her father's name,
And sigh'd profoundly, conscious of the shame.

Dryden.

2. With great degrees of knowledge; with deep insight.

Domenichino was profoundly skill'd in all the parts of painting, but wanting genius, he had less of nobleness.

Dryden.

PROFOUNDNESS. n. f. [from profound.] To foretell; to foresee.

1. Depth of place.

2. Depth of knowledge.

Their wits, which did every where else conquer hardness, were with profoundness here over-matched.

Hooker.

PROFUNDITY. n. f. [from profound.] Depth of place or knowledge.

The other turn'd
Round through the vast profundity obscure.

Milton.

PROFUSE. adj. [profusus, Lat.] Lavish; too liberal; prodigal; overabounding; exuberant.

On a green shady bank, profuse of flow'rs,
Penfive I sat.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

Oh liberty, thou goddess heav'nly bright,
Profuse of blis, and pregnant with delight.

Addison.

One long dead has a due proportion of praise; in which, whilst he lived, his friends were too profuse, and his enemies too sparing.

Addison.

PROFUSELY. adv. [from profuse.] 1. Lavishly; prodigally.

2. With exuberance.

Then spring the living herbs profusely wild.

Thomson.

PROFUSENESS. n. f. [from profuse.] Lavishness; prodigality.

One of a mean fortune manages his store with extreme parsimony; but, with fear of running into profuseness, never arrives to the magnificence of living.

Dryden.

Profuseness of doing good, a soul unsatisfied with all it has done, and an unextinguished desire of doing more.

Dryden.

Hospitality sometimes degenerates into profuseness, and ends in madness and folly.

Aitken's Sermons.

PROFUSION. n. f. [profusio, Lat. profusio, Fr. from profuse.] 1. Lavishness; prodigality; extravagance.

What meant thy pompous progress through the empire?
Thy vast profusion to the factious nobles.

Rowe.

2. Lavish expence; superfluous effusion.

He was desirous to avoid not only profusion, but the least effusion of christian blood.

Hayward.

The great profusion and expence
Of his revenues bred him much offence.

Daniel.

3. Abundance; exuberant plenty.

Trade is fitted to the nature of our country, as it abounds with a great profusion of commodities of its own growth, very convenient for other countries.

Addison.

The fair profusion, yellow Autumn spies.

Thomson.

To PROG. v. n. 1. To rob; to steal.

2. To shift meanly for provisions. A low word.

She went out progg'ing for provisions as before.

L'Estr.

PROG. n. f. [from the verb.] Victuals; provision of any kind. A low word.

O nephew! your grief is but folly,

In town you may find better prog,
Spouse tucked up doth in patens trudge it,
With handkerchief of prog, like trull with budget;
And eat by turns plumcake and judge it.

Swift's Miscel.

PROGENERATION. n. f. [progenere, Lat.] The act of begetting; propagation.PROGENITOR. n. f. [progenitus, Lat.] A forefather; an ancestor in a direct line.

Although these things be already past away by her progenitors, former grants unto those lords, yet I could find a way to remedy a great part thereof.

Spenser's state of Ireland.

Like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,
Go cheerfully together.

Shakspeare.

All generations had hither come,
From all the ends of th' Earth, to celebrate
And reverence thee, their great progenitor.

Milton.

Power by right of fatherhood is not possible in any one, otherwise than as Adam's heir, or as progenitor over his own descendants.

The principal actors in Milton's poem are not only our progenitors, but representatives.

Addison.

PROGENY. n. f. [progenie, old Fr. progenies, Lat.] Offspring; race; generation.

The sons of God have God's own natural son as a second Adam from heaven, whose race and progeny they are by spiritual and heavenly birth.

Hooker, b. v. f. 36.

Not me begotten of a shepherd swain,
But issu'd from the progeny of kings.

Shakspeare.

Gift to his progeny of all that land.
The base degenerate iron offspring ends;
A golden progeny from heav'n descends.

Milton.

Thus shall we live in perfect bliss, and see Deathless ourselves, our numerous progeny.

Dryden.

We are the more pleased to behold the throne surrounded by a numerous progeny, when we consider the virtues of those from whom they descend.

Addison's Freeholder.

PROGNOSTICABLE. adj. [from prognosticate.] Such as may be foreknown or foretold.

The causes of this inundation cannot be regular, and therefore their effects not prognosticable like eclipses.

Brown.

To PROGNOSTICATE. v. a. [from prognostick.] To foretell; to foresee.

He had now outlived the day, which his tutor Sandford had prognosticated upon his nativity he would not outlive.

Clarendon.

Unkill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,
I neither will, nor can prognosticate.

Dryden.

To the young gaping heir, his father's fate.
PROGNOSTICATION. n. f. [from prognosticate.]

1. The act of foreknowing or foreshowing.

If an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear.

Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

Raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall he be set against a brick-wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him, where he is to behold him, with flies blown to death.

Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

This theory of the earth begins to be a kind of prophecy or prognostication of things to come, as it hath been hitherto an history of things past.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Foretoken.

He bid him farewell, arming himself in a black armour, as a badge or prognostication of his mind.

Sidney.

PROGNOSTICATOR. n. f. [from prognosticate.] Foreteller; foreknower.

That astrologer, who made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather by a direct inversion of the common prognosticators, to let his belief run quite counter to reports.

Government of the Tongue.

PROGNOSTICK. adj. [prognostique, Fr. prognosticos, Lat.] Fore-taken disease or recovery; foreshowing; as, a prognostick sign.

PROGNOSTICK. n. f. [from the adj..] 1. The skill of foretelling diseases or the event of diseases.

Hippocrates's prognostick is generally true, that it is very hard to resolve a small apoplexy.

Arbutnot.

2. A prediction.

Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be verily'd at last.

Swift.

3. A token forerunning.

Whatsoever you are or shall be, has been but an early prognostick from what you were.

Southey.

Careful observers
By sure prognosticks may foretell a show'r.

Swift.

PROGRESS. n. f. [progreus, Fr. from progressus, Lat.] 1. Course; procession; passage.

I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to-day.

Shakspeare, Julius Caesar.

The morn begins
Her rosy progress smiling.

Milton.

The Sylphs behold it kindling as it flies,
And pleas'd pursue its progress through the skies.

Pope.

2. Advancement;

PRO

2. Advancement; motion forward.

Through all thy veins shall run
A cold and drowsy humour, which shall seize Each vital spirit; for no pulse shall keep His nat'ral progress, but surcease to beat.

Shakspeare.

This motion worketh in round at first, which way to deliver itself; and then worketh in progress, where it findeth the deliverance easiest.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Out of Ethiopia beyond Egypt had been a strange progress for ten hundred thousand men.

Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Whoever understands the progress and revolutions of nature, will see that neither the present form of the earth, nor its first form, were permanent and immutable.

Burnet.

It is impossible the mind should ever be stopped in its progress in this space.

Locke.

The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into the endless expansion.

Locke.

Perhaps I judge hastily, there being several, in whose writings I have made very little progress.

Swift's Miscel.

Intellectual improvement; advancement in knowledge.

Solon the wise his progress never ceas'd,
But still his learning with his days increas'd.

Denham.

It is strange, that men should not have made more progress in the knowledge of these things.

Burnet.

Several defects in the understanding hinder it in its progress to knowledge.

Locke.

Others despond at the first difficulty, and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities.

Locke.

Removal from one place to another.

From Egypt arts their progress made to Greece,
Wrapt in the fable of the golden fleece.

Denham.

A journey of state; a circuit.

He gave order, that there should be nothing in his journey like unto a warlike march, but rather like unto the progress of a king in full peace.

Bacon.

O may I live to hail the day,
When the glad nation shall survey
Their sovereign, through his wide command,
Passing in progress o'er the land.

Addison.

To PROGRESS. v. n. [progressio, Lat.] To move forward; to pass. Not used.

Let me wipe off this honourable dew,
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks.

Shakspeare.

PROGRESSION. n. f. [progressio, Fr. progressio, Lat.] 1. Process; regular and gradual advance.

The squares of the diameters of these rings, made by any prismatick colour, were in arithmetical progression.

Newton.

2. Motion forward.

Those worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning, are likely to find a clearer progression, when so many rubs are levelled.

Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

In philosophical enquiries, the order of nature should govern, which in all progression is to go from the place one is then in, to that which lies next to it.

Locke.

3. Course; passage.

He hath fram'd a letter, which accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried.

Shakspeare.

4. Intellectual advance.

For the saving the long progression of the thoughts to first principles, the mind should provide several intermediate principles.

Locke.

PROGRESSIONAL. adj. [from progression.] Such as are in a state of increase or advance.

They maintain their accomplished ends, and relapse not again unto their progression imperfections.

Brown.

PROGRESSIVE. adj. [progressif, Fr. from progress.] Going forward; advancing.

Princes, if they use ambitious men, should handle it so, as they be still progressive, and not retrograde.

Bacon.

In progressive motion, the arms and legs move successively; but in statation, both together.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The progressive motion of this animal is made not by walking, but by leaping.

Ray on the Creation.

Their course
Progressive, retrograde, or standing still.

Milton.

Ere the progressive course of restless age
Performs three thousand times its annual stage,
May not our pow'r and learning be supprest,
And arts and empire learn to travel west?

Prior.

PROGRESSIVELY. adv. [from progressive.] By gradual steps or regular course.

The reason why they fall in that order, from the greatest effects progressively to the least, is, because the greatest effects denote a greater distance of the moon before the sun, and consequently a nearer approach to her conjunction.

Holder.

PROGRESSIVENESS. n. f. [from progressive.] The state of advancing.

To PROHIBIT. v. a. [prohibeo, Lat. prohibere, Fr.] 1. To forbid; to interdict by authority.

PROHIBITION. n. f. [prohibition, Fr. prohibitio, Lat. from prohibit.] Forbiddance; interdict; act of forbidding.

Might there not be some other mystery in this prohibition, than they think of?

Hooker, b. iv. f. 6.

'Gainst self-slaughter
There is a prohibition so divine,
That cravens my weak hand.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

He bestowed the liberal choice of all things, with one only prohibition, to try his obedience.

Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Let us not think hard
One easy prohibition, who enjoy
Free leave so large to all things else.

Milton's Par. Lost.

The law of God in the ten commandments conflicts mostly of prohibitions; thou shalt not do such a thing.

Tillotson.

PROHIBITORY. adj. [from prohibit.] Implying prohibition; forbidding.

A prohibition will lie on this statute, notwithstanding the penalty annexed; because it has words prohibitory, as well as a penalty annexed.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

To PROJECT. v. a. [projicio, projectus, Lat.] 1. To throw out; to cast forward.

Th' ascending villas
Project long shadows o'er the crystal tide.

Pope.

2. To exhibit a form, as of the image thrown on a mirror.

Diffusive of themselves where e'er they pass,
They make that warmth in others they expect;
Their valour works like bodies on a glass,

Dryden.

And does its image on their men project.
If we had a plan of the naked lines of longitude and latitude, projected on the meridian, a learner might much more speedily advance himself in the knowledge of geography.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. [Projecter, Fr.] To scheme; to form in the mind; to contrive.

It ceases to be counsel, to compel men to assent to whatever tumultuary patrons shall project.

King Charles.

 Low proletarian tything-men. Hudibras, p. i.
PROLIFCATION. n. f. [proles and facio, Lat.] Generation of children.
 Their fruits, proceeding from simpler roots, are not so distinguishable as the offspring of sensible creatures, and prolifcations descending from double origins. Brown.
PROLIFICK. adj. [prolifque, Fr. proles and facio.] Fruitful.
PROLIFICAL. adj. ful; generative; pregnant; productive.
 Main ocean flow'd; not idle, but with warm
 Prolifick humour soft'ning all her globe,
 Fermented the great mother to conceive, Satiate with genial moisture. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Every dispute in religion grew prolifical, and in ventilating one question, many new ones were started. Decay of Piety.
 His vital pow'r air, earth and seas supplies,
 And breeds what'er is bred beneath the skies;
 For every kind, by thy prolifick might,
 Springs. Dryden.
 All dogs are of one species, they mingling together in generation, and the breed of such mixtures being prolifick. Ray.
 From the middle of the world,
 The sun's prolifick rays are hurl'd;
 'Tis from that seat he darts those beams,
 Which quicken earth with genial flames. Prior.
PROLIFICALITY. adv. [prolifice, Fr.] Fruitfully; pregnantly.
PROLIX. adj. [prolixus, Fr. prolixus, Latin.]
 1. Long; tedious; not concise.
 According to the caution we have been so prolix in giving, if we aim at right understanding the true nature of it, we must examine what apprehension mankind make of it. Digby.
 Should I at large repeat
 The head-roll of her vicious tricks,
 My poem would be too prolix. Prior.
 2. Of long duration. This is a very rare sense.
 If the appellant appoints a term too prolix, the judge may then assign a competent term. Ayliffe's Parergon.
PROLIXIOUS. adj. [prolixus, Fr.] Dilatory; tedious. A word of Shakespeare's coining.
 Lay by all nicety and prolixious blushes. Shakefp.
PROLIXITY. n. f. [prolixitas, Fr. from prolix.] Tediousness; tiresome length; want of brevity.
 It is true, without any slips of prolixity, or crossing the plain highway of talk, that the good Antonio hath lost a ship. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
 In some other passages, I may have, to shun prolixity, unawares slipped into the contrary extreme. Boyle.
PROLIXLY. adv. [prolixus, Fr.] At great length; tediously.
 On these prolixly thankful the enlarg'd. Dryden.
PROLIXNESS. n. f. [prolixitas, Fr.] Tediousness.
PROLOCUTOR. n. f. [prolocutor, Lat.] The foreman; the speaker of a convocation.
 The convocation the queen prorogued, though at the expense of Dr. Atterbury's displeasure, who was design'd their prolocutor. Swift.

PROLOCUTORSHIP. n. f. [prolocutor, Lat.] The office or dignity of prolocutor.
PROLOGUE. n. f. [πρόλογος; prologue, Fr. prologus, Latin.]
 1. Preface; introduction to any discourse or performance.
 Come, sit, and a song — Shall we clap into 't roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice? Shakefp. As You Like it.
 In her face excuse
 Came prologue, and apology too prompt. Milton.
 2. Something spoken before the entrance of the actors of a play.
 If my death might make this island happy,
 And prove the period of their tyranny,
 I would expend it with all willingness;
 But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shakefp.
 The peaking cornuto comes in the infant, after we had spoke the prologue of our comedy. Shakefp.
TO PROLOGUE. v. a. [prologus, Lat.] To introduce with a formal preface.
 He his special nothing ever prologues. Shakefp.
TO PROLONG. v. a. [prolonger, Fr. pro and longus, Lat.]
 1. To lengthen out; to continue; to draw out.
 Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much. Milton.
 Th' unhappy queen with talk prolong'd the night. Dryd.
 2. To put off to a distant time.
 To-morrow in my judgment is too sudden;
 For I myself am not so well provided,
 As else I would be were the day prolong'd. Shakefp.
PROLONGATION. n. f. [prolongatio, Fr. from prolong.]
 1. The act of lengthening.
 Nourishment in living creatures is for the prolongation of life. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 2. Delay to a longer time.
 This ambassage concerned only the prolongation of days for payment of monies. Bacon's Henry VII.
PROLUSION. n. f. [prolusio, Lat.] Entertainments; performance of diversion.
 It is memorable, which Famianus Strada, in the first book of his academical prolusions, relates of Suarez. Hakewill.
PROMINENT. adj. [prominens, Lat.] Standing out beyond the near parts; protuberant; extant.
 Whales are described with two prominent spouts on their heads, whereas they have but one in the forehead terminating over the windpipe. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Promiscuous from all nations. Milton's Par. Lost.
Promiscuous love by marriage was restrain'd. Roscom.
 In rush'd at once a rude promiscuous crowd;
 The guards, and then each other overbear,
 And in a moment throng the theatre. Dryden.
 No man, that considers the promiscuous dispensations of God's providence in this world, can think it unreasonable to conclude, that after this life good men shall be rewarded, and sinners punished. Tillotson's Sermons.
 The earth was formed out of that promiscuous mass of sand, earth, shells, subsiding from the water. Woodward.
 Clubs, diamonds, hearts, in wild disorder seen,
 With throngs promiscuous throw the level green. Pope.
 A wild, where weeds and flow'rs promiscuous shoot. Pope.
PROMISCUOUSLY. adv. [promiscue, Fr.] With confused mixture; indiscriminately.
 We beheld where once stood Ilium, called Troy promiscue of Tros.
 That generation, as the sacred writer modestly expresses it, married and gave in marriage without discretion or decency, but promiscueously, and with no better a guide than the impulses of a brutal appetite. Woodward.
 Here might you see Barons and peasants on the embattled field, Philips.
 In one huge heap, promiscueously amass'd.
 Unaw'd by precepts human or divine, Pope.
 Like birds and beasts promiscueously they join.

The very promulgation of the punishment will be part of the punishment, and anticipate the execution. South.
PROMULGATOR. n. f. [from promulgator.] Publisher; open teacher.
How groundless a calumny this is, appears from the sanctity of the christian religion, which excludes fraud and falsehood; so also from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piety.
TO PROMULGE. v. a. [from promulgo, Lat.] To promulgate; to publish; to teach openly.
The chief design of them is, to establish the truth of a new revelation in those countries, where it is first promulgated and propagated. Atterbury.
PROMULGER. n. f. [from promulger.] Publisher; promulgator.
The promulgators of our religion, Jesus Christ and his apostles, raised men and women from the dead, not once only, but often. Atterbury.
PROMATOR. n. f. In anatomy, a muscle of the radius, of which there are two, that help to turn the palm downwards. Dict.
PRONE. adj. [from pronus, Latin.]
  1. Bending downward; not erect.
There wanted yet a creature not prone, And brute as other creatures, but indu'd With sanctity of reason, might erect His stature, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
  2. Lying with the face downwards: contrary to supine.
Upon these three positions in man, wherein the spine can only be at right lines with the thigh, arise those postures, prone, supine and erect. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
  3. Precipitous; headlong; going downwards.
Down thither prone in flight He speeds, and through the vast ethereal sky Sails between worlds. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
  4. Declivous; sloping.
Since the floods demand, For their descent, a prone and sinking land: Does not this due declivity declare A wife director's providential care? Blackmore.
  5. Inclined; propense; disposed. It has commonly an ill sense.
The labour of doing good, with the pleasure arising from the contrary, doth make men for the most part flower to the one and prone to the other, than that duty, prescribed them by law, can prevail sufficiently with them. Hooker.
Those who are ready to confess him in judgment and profession, are very prone to deny him shamefully in their doings. South's Sermons.

PRO

- If we are prone to sedition, and delight in change, there is no cure more proper than trade, which supplies business to the active, and wealth to the indigent. Addison.
Still prone to change, though still the slaves of state. Pope.
- PRO'NESS. n. f. [from prone.]
  1. The state of bending downwards; not erectness.
If erectness be taken, as it is largely opposed unto proneness, or the posture of animals looking downwards, carrying their venters, or opposite part to the spine, directly towards the earth, it may admit of question. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
  2. The state of lying with the face downwards; not supineness.
  3. Defcent; declivity.
  4. Inclination; propension; disposition to ill.
The holy spirit saw that mankind is unto virtue hardly drawn, and that righteousness is the less accounted of by reason of the proneness of our affections to that which delighteth. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
The soul being first from nothing brought, When God's grace fails her, doth to nothing fall; And this declining proneness unto nought, Is ev'n that sin that we are born withal. Davies.
He instituted this way of worship, because of the carnality of their hearts, and their proneness of the people to idolatry. Tillotson's Sermons.
The proneness of good men to commiserate want, in what-soever shape it appears. Atterbury's Sermons.
How great is the proneness of our nature, to comply with this temptation. Rogers's Sermons.
- PRONG. n. f. [from pronghen, Dutch, to squeeze. Alphabeta.] A fork.
The cooks make no more ado, but slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Saunders's Journey.
Whacum his sea-coal prong threw by, And bafely turn'd his back to fly. Hudibras.
Be mindful, With iron teeth of rakes and prongs to move The crufted earth. Dryden's Virg. Georg.
- PRO'NITY. n. f. [from prone.] Proneness. A word not used. Of this mechanick pronity, I do not see any good tendency. Moré's Divine Dialogues.
- PRONOUN. n. f. [from pronomen, Fr. pronomen, Lat.]
I, thou, he; we, ye, they, are names given to persons, and used instead of their proper names, from whence they had the name of pronouns, as though they were not nouns themselves, but used instead of nouns. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
- TO PRONOUNCE. v. a. [from pronuncer, Fr. pronuncio, Lat.]
  1. To speak; to utter.
He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth. Jer. xxxv. 18.
  2. To utter solemnly; to utter confidently.
She So good a lady, that no tongue could ever Pronounce dishonour of her. Shakespeare Henry VIII.
I have pronounced the word, faith the Lord. Jer. xxxiv. 5.
So was his will Pronounc'd among the gods. Milton.
Sternly he pronounc'd the rigid interdiction. Milton.
The pronouncing of sentence of death is the office of inferior magistrates. Locke.
Abfalom pronounced a sentence of death against his brother. Locke.
  3. To form or articulate by the organs of speech.
Language of man pronounc'd By tongue of brute, and human sense express'd. Milton.
Though diversity of tongues continue, this would render the pronouncing them easier. Holder.
  4. To utter rhetorically.
- TO PRONOUNCE. v. n. To speak with confidence or authority.
How confidently soever men pronounce of themselves, and believe that they are most pious, when they are most eager and unquiet; yet 'tis sure this is far removed from the true genius of religion. Decay of Piety.
Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidently; but wise men will, in matters of discourse, conclude firmly, and in matters of fact, act surely. South's Sermons.
- PRONOUNCER. n. f. [from pronounce.] One who pronounces. The pronouncer thereof shall be condemned in expences. Ayliffe's Parergon.
- PRONUNCIATION. n. f. [from pronunciatio, from pronuncio, Lat. pronunciatio, Fr.] The act or mode of utterance.
The design of speaking being to communicate our thoughts by ready, easy and graceful pronunciation, all kind of letters have been searched out, that were serviceable for the purpose. Holder.
It were easy to produce thousands of his verses, which are lame for want of half a foot, sometimes a whole one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwise. Dryden.

PROOF.

PRO

- PROOF. n. f. [from probo.]
  1. Evidence; testimony; convincing token; convincing argument; means of conviction.
That they all have always so testified, I see not how we should possibly with a proof more palpable than this. Hooker.
This has neither evidence of truth, nor proof sufficient to give it warrant. Hooker.
Though the manner of their trials should be altered, yet the proof of every thing must needs be by the testimony of such persons as the parties shall produce. Spenser.
That which I shall report will bear no credit. Shakespeare.
Were not the proof so high. Shakespeare.
One foul in both, whereof good proof This day affords. Milton.

The nearer I find myself verging to that period, which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left me. Pope.
PROP. n. f. [from propere, Dutch.] A support; a stay; that 'on which any thing rests.
The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. Shakespeare.
You take my house, when you do take the prop That doth sustain my house; you take my life, When you do take the means whereby I live. Shakespeare.
Some plants creep along the ground, or wind about other trees or props, and cannot support themselves. Bacon.
That he might on many props repose, He strengths his own, and who his part did take. Daniel.
Again, if by the body's prop we stand, If on the body's life, her life depend, As Meleager's on the fatal brand, The body's good the only would intend. Davies.
Fairest unsupported flower From her best prop so far. Milton.
The current of his victories found no stop, Till Cromwell came, his party's chiefest prop. Waller.
'Twas a considerable time before the great fragments that fell rested in a firm posture; for the props and stays, whereby they leaned one upon another, often failed. Barnet.
The props return Into thy house, that bore the burden'd vines. Dryden.
- PROPAGABLE. adj. [from propagare.] Such as may be spread; such as may be continued by succession.
Such creatures as are produced each by its peculiar seed, constitute a distinct propagable sort of creatures. Boyle.
- TO PROPAGATE. v. a. [from propago, Latin.]
  1. To continue or spread by generation or successive production: All that I eat, or drink, or shall beget, Is propagated curle! Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Is it an elder brother's duty To propagate his family and name; You would not have yours die and buried with you? Orway.
From hills and dales the cheerful cries rebound; For echo hunts along, and propagates the sound. Dryden.
  2. To extend; to widen.
I have upon a high and pleasant hill Feign'd fortune to be thron'd: the base o' th' mount Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures, That labour on the bosom of this sphere To propagate their fates. Shakespeare Timon of Athens.
  3. To carry on from place to place; to promote.
Some have thought the propagating of religion by arms not only lawful, but meritorious. Decay of Piety.
Who are those that truth must propagate, Within the confines of my father's state. Dryden.
Those who seek truth only, and desire to propagate nothing else, freely expose their principles to the test. Locke.
Because dense bodies conserve their heat a long time, and the densest bodies conserve their heat the longest, the vibrations of their parts are of a lasting nature; and therefore may be propagated along solid fibres of uniform dense matter to a great distance, for conveying into the brain the impressions made upon all the organs of sense. Newton.
  4. To encrease; to promote.
Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast, Which thou wilt propagate, to have them preft With more of thine. Shakespeare.
Sooth'd with his future fame, And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

O prophet of glad tidings! finisher Of utmost hope! Milton.

He lov'd so fast, As if he fear'd each day wou'd be her last;

Too true a prophet to foresee the fate, That should so soon divide their happy state. Dryden.

God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake the man. Locke.

2. One of the sacred writers empowered by God to foretell futurity.

His champions are the prophets and apostles. Shakefp.

PROPHETESS. n. f. [prophete, Fr. from prophet.] A woman that foretells future events.

He shall split thy very heart with sorrow, And lay poor Margaret was a prophetess. Shakefp.

That it is consonant to the word of God, so in singing to answer, the practice of Miriam the prophetess, when the answered the men in her song, will approve. Peacham.

If my love but once were crown'd Fair prophetess, my grief would cease. Prior.

PROPHETICK. adj. [prophetique, Fr. from prophet.]

PROPHETICAL. adj. [from prophetick.] 1. Foreseeing or foretelling future events.

Say, why Upon this blasted heath you stop our way, With such prophetick greeting. Shakefp. Macbeth.

The counsel of a wife and then prophetical friend was forgotten. Watson.

Some perfumes procure prophetical dreams. Bacon.

'Till old experience do attain To something like prophetick strain. Milton.

Some famous prophetick pictures represent the fate of England by a mole, a creature blind and busy, smooth and deceitful, continually working under ground, but now and then to be discerned in the surface.

No arguments made a stronger impression on these Pagan converts, than the predictions relating to our Saviour in those old prophetick writings deposited among the hands of the greatest enemies to christianity, and owned by them to have been extant many ages before his appearance. Addison.

2. It has of before the thing foretold.

The more I know, the more my fears augment, And fears are oft prophetick of th' event. Dryden.

PROPHETICALLY. adv. [from prophetical.] With knowledge of futurity; in manner of a prophecy.

He is so prophetically proud of an heroic coddgelling, that he raves in laying nothing. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida.

This great success among Jews and Gentiles, part of it historically true at the compiling of these articles, and part of it prophetically true then, and fulfilled afterward, was a most effectual argument to give authority to this faith. Hammond.

She sigh'd, and thus prophetically spoke. Dryden.

TO PROPHETIZE. v. n. [prophetizer, Fr. from prophet.] To give predictions.

For myserious things of faith rely On the propoment, heaven's authority. Dryden.

PROPORTION. n. f. [proportion, Fr. proportio, Lat.] 1. Comparative relation of one thing to another; ratio.

Let any man's wisdom determine by lessening the territory, and increasing the number of inhabitants, what proportion is requisite to the peopling of a region in such a manner, that the land shall be neither too narrow for those whom it feedeth, nor capable of a greater multitude. Raleigh.

By proportion to these rules, we may judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of injurious persons. Taylor.

Things high equivalent and neighbouring value By lot are parted; but high heav'n thy share, In equal balance weigh'd gainst earth and hell, Flings up the adverse scale, and thus proportion. Prior.

2. Settled

Nature else hath conference With profound sleep, and so doth warning send By prophetizing dreams. Daniel's Civil War.

PROPHYLACTICK. adj. [προφυλακτικός, from προφυλάσσω.] Preventive; preservative.

Medicine is distributed into prophylactick, or the art of preserving health; and therapeutick, or the art of restoring health. Watts's Logick.

PROPINQUITY. n. f. [propinquitat, Lat.] 1. Nearness; proximity; neighbourhood.

They draw the retina nearer to the crystalline humour, and by their relaxation suffer it to return to its natural distance according to the exigency of the object, in respect of distance or propinquity. Ray on the Creation.

2. Nearness of time.

Thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolations, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration, than those soon decaying fruits of summer. Brown.

3. Kindred; nearness of blood.

Here I disclaim all my paternal care, Propinquity, and property of blood, And as a stranger to my heart and me Hold thee. Shakefp. King Lear.

PROPI'TABLE. adj. [from propitiare.] Such as may be induced to favour; such as may be made propitious.

TO PROPITIATE. v. a. [propitio, Lat.] To induce to favour; to gain; to conciliate; to make propitious.

You, her priest, declare What offerings may propitiate the fair, Rich orient pearl, bright stones that ne'er decay, Or polish'd lines which longer last than

2. Settled relation of comparative quantity; equal degree.
Greater visible good does not always raise men's desires, in proportion to the greatness it is acknowledged to have, though every little trouble sets us on work to get rid of it. Locke.
He must be little skilled in the world, who thinks that men's talking much or little shall hold proportion only to their knowledge. Locke.
Several nations are recovered out of their ignorance, in proportion as they converse more or less with those of the reformed churches. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
In proportion as this resolution grew, the terrors before us seemed to vanish. Tatler, N° 81.
3. Harmonick degree.
His volant touch
Infin'd through all proportions, low and high, Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.
4. Symmetry; adaptation of one to another.
It must be mutual in proportion due Giv'n and receiv'd. Milton.
No man of the present age is equal in the strength, proportion and knitting of his limbs to the Hercules of Farnese. Dryden's Dufresney.
The proportions are so well observed, that nothing appears to an advantage, or distinguishes itself above the rest. Addison.
Harmony, with ev'ry grace,
Plays in the fair proportions of her face. Mrs. Carter.
5. Form; size.
All things receiv'd, do such proportion take,
As those things have, wherein they are receiv'd;
So little glasses little faces make,
And narrow webs on narrow frames are weav'd. Davies.
To PROPORTION. v. a. [from proportion, Fr. from the noun.]
  1. To adjust by comparative relation.
Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto: and to proportion as well excesses as defects, are opposite. Hooker.
Till body up to spirit work, in bounds
Proportion'd to each kind. Milton.
In the loss of an object, we do not proportion our grief to the real value it bears, but to the value our fancies set upon it. Addison's Spectator, N° 256.
  2. To form symmetrically.
Nature had proportioned her without any fault, quickly to be discovered by the senses; yet altogether seem'd not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in. Sidney.
- PROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from proportion.] Adjusted by comparative relation; such as is fit.
His commandments are not grievous, because he offers us an assistance proportionable to the difficulty. Tillotson.
It was enlivened with an hundred and twenty trumpets, assisted with a proportionable number of other instruments. Addison.
- PROPORTIONABLY. adv. [from proportion.] According to proportion; according to comparative relations.
The mind ought to examine all the grounds of probability, and upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive it proportionably to the preponderancy of the greater grounds of probability, on one side or the other. Locke.
The parts of a great thing are great, and there are proportionably large estates in a large country. Arbutnot.
Though religion be more eminently necessary to those in stations of authority, yet these qualities are proportionably conducive to publick happiness in every inferior relation. Rogers.
- PROPORTIONAL. adj. [from proportion, Fr. from proportion.] Having a settled comparative relation; having a certain degree of any quality compared with something else.
As likely tasting to attain Proportional ascent, which cannot be
But to be gods or angels. Milton's Par. Lost.
Four numbers are said to be proportional, when the first containeth, or is contained by the second, as often as the third containeth, or is contained by the fourth. Cocher.
If light be swifter in bodies than in vacuum in the proportion of the lines which measure the refraction of the bodies, the forces of the bodies to reflect and refract light, are very nearly proportional to the densities of the same bodies. Newton.
- PROPORTIONALITY. n. f. [from proportional.] The quality of being proportional.
All sense, as grateful, dependeth upon the equality or the proportionality of the motion or impression made. Grew.
- PROPORTIONALLY. adv. [from proportional.] In a stated degree.
If these circles, whilst their centres keep their distances and positions, could be made less in diameter, their interfering one with another, and by consequence the mixture of the heterogeneous rays would be proportionally diminished. Newton.
- PROPORTIONATE. adj. [from proportion.] Adjusted to something else, according to a certain rate or comparative relation.
The connection between the end and any means is adequate, but between the end and means proportionate. Grew.
The use of spectacles, by an adequate connection of truths, gave men occasion to think of microscopes and telescopes;

- but the invention of burning glasses depended on a proportionate; for that figure, which contracts the species of any body, that is, the rays by which it is seen, will, in the same proportion, contract the heat wherewith the rays are accompanied. Grew's Cofmol.
In the state of nature, one man comes by no absolute power, to use a criminal according to the passion or heats of his own will; but only to retribute to him, so far as conscience dictates, what is proportionate to his transgression. Locke.
To PROPORTIONATE. v. a. [from proportion.] To adjust, according to settled rates, to something else.
The parallelism and due proportionate inclination of the axis of the earth. More's Divine Dialogues.
Since every single particle hath an innate gravitation toward all others, proportionate by matter and distance, it evidently appears, that the outward atoms of the chaos would necessarily tend inwards, and descend from all quarters towards the middle of the whole space. Bentley's Sermon.
- PROPORTIONATENESS. n. f. [from proportionate.] The state of being by comparison adjusted.
By this congruity of those faculties to their proper objects, and by the fitness and proportionateness of these objective impressions upon their respective faculties, accommodated to their reception, the sensible nature hath so much of perception, as is necessary for its sensible being. Hale.
- PROPOSAL. n. f. [from propos.]
  1. Scheme or design propounded to consideration or acceptance.
If our proposals once again were heard,
We should compel them to a quick result. Milton.
The work, you mention, will sufficiently recommend itself, when your name appears with the proposals. Addison's Po.
  2. Offer to the mind.
Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than refuse it. South.
This truth is not likely to be entertained readily upon the first proposal. Autenbury.
- To PROPOSE. v. a. [from propos, Fr. propono, Lat.] To offer to the consideration.
Raphael to Adam's doubt propos'd, Benevolent and facil thus reply'd. Milton.
My design is to treat only of those, who have chiefly proposed to themselves the latter as the principal reward of their labours. Tatler, N° 81.
In learning any thing, there should be as little as possible first proposed to the mind at once, and that being understood, proceed then to the next adjoining part. Watts.
- To PROPOSE. v. n. To lay schemes. Not in use.
- Run thee into the parlour,
There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice, Proposing with the prince and Claudio. Shakef.
- PROPOSER. n. f. [from propos.] One that offers any thing to consideration.
Faith is the assent to any proposition, not made out by the deductions of reason, but upon the credit of the proposer, as coming from God.
He provided a statute, that whoever proposed any alteration to be made, should do it with a rope about his neck; if the matter proposed were generally approved, then it should pass into a law; if it went in the negative, the proposer to be immediately hanged. Swift.
- PROPOSITION. n. f. [from propositio, Fr. propositio, Lat.]
  1. A sentence in which any thing is affirmed or decreed.
Chrysippus, labouring how to reconcile these two propositions, that all things are done by fate, and yet that something is in our own power, cannot extricate himself. Hammond.
The compounding of the representation of things, with an affirmation or negation, makes a proposition. Hale.
  2. Proposal; offer of terms.
The enemy sent propositions, such as upon delivery of a strong fortified town, after a handsome defence, are usually granted. Clarendon.
- PROPOSITIONAL. adj. [from proposition.] Considered as a proposition.
If it has a singular subject in its propositional sense, it is always ranked with universals. Watts's Logic.
- To PROPOUND. v. a. [from propono, Lat.]
  1. To offer to consideration; to propose.
The parliament, which now is held, decreed
Whatever pleas'd the king but to propound.
To leave as little as I may unto fancy, which is wild and irregular, I will propound a rule. Daniel.
Dar'st thou to the son of God propound
To worship thee. Milton.
The greatest stranger must propound the argument. Mrs.
The arguments, which christianity propounds to us, are reasonable encouragements to bear sufferings patiently. Tillotson.
  2. To offer; to exhibit.
A spirit rais'd from depth of under-ground,
That shall make answer to such questions,
As by your grace shall be propounded him. Shakef.
- PROPOUNDER. n. f. [from propono.] He that propounds; he that offers; proposer.

PROPRIETARY.

PRO

- PROPRIETARY. n. f. [from proprietaire, Fr. from propriety.] Possessor in his own right.
'Tis a great mistake to think ourselves stewards in some of God's gifts, and proprietaries in others: they are all equally to be employed, according to the designation of the donor. Government of the Tongue.
- PROPRIETARY. adj. Belonging to a certain owner.
Though sheep, which are proprietary, are seldom marked, yet they are not apt to straggle. Grew's Cofmol.
- PROPRIETOR. n. f. [from proprius, Lat.] A possessor in his own right.
Man, by being master of himself, and proprietor of his own person, and the actions or labour of it, had still in himself the great foundation of property.
Though they are scattered on the wings of the morning, and remain in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall his right hand fetch them out, and lead them home to their ancient proprietor. Rogers.
- PROPRIETRESS. n. f. [from proprietaire.] A female possessor in her own right; a mistress.
A big-bellied bitch borrowed another bitch's kennel to lay her burthen in; the proprietress demanded possession, but the other begged her excuse. L'Estrange.
- PROPRIETY. n. f. [from proprietas, Fr. proprietas, Lat.]
  1. Peculiarity of possession; exclusive right.
You that have promis'd to yourselves propriety in love,
Know womens hearts like straws do move. Suckling.
Benefit of peace, and vacation for piety, render it necessary by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.
Hail wedded love! mysterious law, true source
Of human offspring, sole propriety
In Paradise! of all things common else. Milton.
They secure propriety and peace. Dryden.
To that we owe not only the safety of our persons and the propriety of our possessions, but our improvement in the several arts. Autenbury.
  2. Accuracy; justness.
Common use, that is the rule of propriety, affords some aid to settle the signification of language. Locke.
- PROPT. for propag. [from prop.] Sustained by some prop.
See in her cell sad Eloisa spread,
Propt in some tomb, a neighbour of the dead. Pope.
- To PROPUGN. v. a. [from propugno, Lat.] To defend; to vindicate.
Thankfulness is our meet tribute to those sacred champions for propugning of our faith. Hammond.
- PROPUGNATION. n. f. [from propugnatio, from propugno, Latin.] Defence.
What propugnatio is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Shakef. Troilus and Cressida.
- PROPUGNER. n. f. [from propugno.] A defender.
So zealous propugners are they of their native creed, that they are importunately diligent to instruct men in it, and in all the little sophistries for defending it. G. v. of the Tongue.
- PROPULSION. n. f. [from propulsus, Lat.] The act of driving forward.
Joy worketh by propulsi'n of the moisture of the brain, when the spirits dilate and occupy more room. Bacon.
The evanescent solid and fluid will scarce differ, and the extremities of those small canals will by propulsi'n be carried off with the fluid continually. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- PRORE. n. f. [from prore, Lat.] The prow; the forepart of the ship. A poetical word used for a rhyme.
There no vessel, with vermilion prore,
Or bark of traffick, glides from shore to shore. Pope.
- PROROGATION. n. f. [from prorogatio, from prorogo, Lat. prorogatio, Fr.]
  1. Continuance; state of lengthening out to a distant time; prolongation.
The fulness and effluence of man's enjoyments in the state of innocence, might seem to leave no place for hope, in respect of any farther addition, but only of the prore-gation and future continuance of what already he possessed. South.
  2. Interruption of the session of parliament by the regal authority.
It would seem extraordinary, if an inferior court should take a matter out of the hands of the high court of parliament, during a prorogation. Swift.
- To PROROGUE. v. a. [from prorogare, Lat. prorogare, Fr.]
  1. To protract; to prolong.
He prorogued his government, still threatening to dismiss himself from publick cares. Dryden.
  2. To put off; to delay.
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued, wanting of thy love. Shakef.
  3. To interrupt the session of parliament to a distant time.
By the king's authority alone, they are assembled, and by him alone are they prorogued and dissolved, but each house may adjourn itself. Bacon.
- PRORUPTION. n. f. [from proruptus, from prorumpo, Lat.] The act of bursting out.

PRO

- Others ground this disruption upon their continued or protracted time of delivery, whereto, excluding but one day, the latter brood impatient by a forcible prorupcion anticipates their period of exclusion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
- PROSA'ICK. adj. [from prosaicus, Fr. prosaicus, from prosa, Lat.] Belonging to prose; resembling prose.
To PROSCRIBE. v. a. [from proscribo, Lat.]
  1. To censure capitally; to doom to destruction.
Robert Vere, earl of Oxford, through the malice of the peers, was banished the realm, and proscribed. Spenser.
I hid for thee
Thy murder of thy brother, being so brib'd,
And writ him in the list of my proscrib'd
After thy fact. Benj. Johnson.
Follow'd and pointed at by fools and boys,
But dreaded and proscrib'd by men of sense. Roscommon.
Some utterly proscrib'd the name of chance, as a word of impious and profane signification; and indeed if taken by us in that sense, in which it was used by the heathen, so as to make any thing casual, in respect of God himself, their exception ought justly to be admitted. South's Sermons.
  2. To interdict. Not in use.
He shall be found,
And taken or proscrib'd this happy ground. Dryden.
- PROSCRIBER. n. f. [from proscribo.] One that dooms to destruction.
The triumvir and proscriber had descended to us in a more hideous form, if the emperor had not taken care to make friends of Virgil and Horace. Dryden.
- PROSCRIPTION. n. f. [from proscriptio, Lat.] Doom to death or confiscation.
You took his voice who should be prick'd to die,
In our black sentence and proscription. Shakef.
Sylla's old troops
Are needy and poor; and have but left t' expect From Catiline new bills and new proscriptions. B. J. huf.
For the title of proscriptio or forfeiture, the emperor hath been judge and party, and justified himself. Bacon.
- PROSE. n. f. [from prosa, Fr. prosa, Lat.] Language not restrained to harmonick sounds or set number of syllables; discourse not metrical.
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton.
The reformation of prose was owing to Boccaccio, who is the standard of purity in the Italian tongue, though many of his phrases are become obsolete. Dryden.
A poet lets you into the knowledge of a device better than a prose writer, as his descriptions are often more diffuse. Addison.
Prose men alone for private ends,
I thought, forsook their ancient friends.
I will be still your friend in prose:
Esteem and friendship to express,
Will not require poetick dress. Swift.
My head and heart thus flowing through my quill,
Verse man and prose man, term me which you will. Pope.
- To PROSECUTE. v. a. [from prosequor, prosecutus, Lat.]
  1. To pursue; to continue endeavours after any thing.
I am belov'd of beauteous Hermia,
Why should not I then prosecute my right? Shakef.
I must not omit a father's timely care,
To prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom. Milton's Agonistes.
He prosecuted this purpose with strength of argument and close reasoning, without incoherent fallies. Locke.
  2. To continue; to carry on.
The same reasons, which induced you to entertain this war, will induce you also to prosecute the same. Hayward.
All resolute to prosecute their ire,
Seeking their own and country's cause to free. Daniel.
He infested Oxford, which gave them the more reason to prosecute the fortifications. Clarendon.
With louder cries
She prosecutes her griefs, and thus replies. Dryden.
  3. To proceed in consideration or disquisition of any thing.
It were an infinite labour to prosecute those things; so far as they might be exemplified in religious and civil actions. Hooker, b. iv. f. 1.
  4. To pursue by law; to sue criminally.
5. To prosecute differs from to persecute: to persecute always implies some cruelty, malignity or injustice; to prosecute, is to proceed by legal measures, either with or without just cause.
- PROSECUTION. n. f. [from prosecute.]
  1. Pursuit; endeavour to carry on.
Many offer at the effects of friendship; but they do not last; they are promising in the beginning, but they fail, jade, and tire in the prosecution. South.
Their jealousy of the British power, as well as their prosecutions of commerce and pursuits of universal monarchy, will fix them in their aversions towards us. Addison.
  2. Suit against a man in a criminal cause.
- PROSECUTOR. n. f. [from prosecute.] One that carries on any thing; a pursuer of any purpose; one who pursues another by law in a criminal cause.

PROSELYTE.

PRO

PROSELYTE. n. f. [προσηλύτης; proselite, Fr.] A convert; one brought over to a new opinion.
He that saw hell in's melancholy dream,
Scar'd from his sins, repented in a fright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd proselite. Cleaveland.
Men become professors and combatants for those opinions they were never convinced of, nor proselites to. Locke.
Where'er you tread,
Millions of proselites behind are led,
Through crowds of new-made converts fill you go. Granov.
What numbers of proselites may we not expect. Addison.
TO PROSELYTE. v. a. To convert. A bad word.
Men of this temper cut themselves off from the opportunities of proseluting others, by averting them from their company. Government of the Tongue.
PROSEMINATION. n. f. [proseminatio, proseminatus, Lat.] Propagation by seed.
Touching the impossibility of the eternal succession of men, animals or vegetables by natural propagation or prosemination, the reasons thereof shall be delivered. Hale.
PROSOPIAN. n. f. [from prosopeia.] One skilled in metre or prosody.
Some have been so bad prosopians, as from thence to derive malum, because that fruit was the first occasion of evil. Brown.
PROSODY. n. f. [prosodie, Fr. προσώδιον.] The part of grammar which teaches the sound and quantity of syllables, and the measures of verse.
PROSOPOPŌIA. n. f. [προσωποποιία; prosopopeia, Fr.] Personification; figure by which things are made persons.
These reasons are pathetically urged, and admirably raised by the prosopopeia of nature speaking to her children. Dryden.
PROSPECT. n. f. [prospectus, Lat.]
1. View of something distant.
Eden and all the coast in prospect lay. Milton.
The Jews being under the economy of immediate revelation, might be supposed to have had a freer prospect into that heaven, whence their law descended. Decay of Piety.
It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul; a little burning felt pushes us more powerfully, than greater pleasures in prospect allure. Locke.
2. Place which affords an extended view.
Him God beholding from his prospect high,
Wherein past, present, future he beholds,
Thus spake, Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
3. Series of objects open to the eye.
There is a very noble prospect from this place: on the one side lies a vast extent of seas, that runs abroad further than the eye can reach: just opposite stands the green promontory of Surrentum, and on the other side the whole circuit of the bay of Naples. Addison.
4. Object of view.
Man to himself
Is a large prospect, rais'd above the level
Of his low creeping thoughts. Denham.
Present, sad prospect! can he ought desire,
But what affects his melancholy eye;
The beauties of the ancient fabrick lost
In chains of craggy hills, or lengths of dreary coast. Prior.
5. View into futurity: opposed to retrospection.
To be king,
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
To him, who hath a prospect of the different state of perfect happiness or misery, that attends all men after this life, the measures of good and evil are mightily changed. Locke.
If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is right; let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die. Locke.
Against himself his gratitude maintain'd,
By favours past, not future prospects gain'd. Smith.
6. Regard to something future.
Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to, or provision for the remaining part of his life. Tillotson.
TO PROSPECT. v. a. [prospectus, Lat.] To look forward. Dict.
PROSPECTIVE. adj. [from prospect.]
1. Viewing at a distance.
2. Acting with foresight.
The French king and king of Sweden are circumspect, industrious and prospective too in this affair. Child.
TO PROSPER. v. a. [prosperare, Lat.] To make happy; to favour.
Kind gods, forgive
Me that, and prosper him. Shakespeare. King Lear.
All things concur to prosper our design;
All things to prosper any love but mine. Dryden.
TO PROSPER. v. n. [prosperare, Fr.]
1. To be prosperous; to be successful.
My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. If.
This man encreased by little and little, and things prosp- ered with him more and more. 2 Mac. viii. 8.
Surer to prosper, than prosperity
Could have assur'd us. Milton.

PRO

2. To thrive; to come forward.
All things do prosper best, when they are advanced to the better; a nursery of stocks ought to be in a more barren ground, than that whereunto you remove them. Bacon.
The plants, which he had set, did thrive and prosper. Cowley.
She visits how they prosper'd, bud, and bloom. Milton.

PROVIDENTLY. adv. [from provident.] With foresight; with wise precaution.
Nature having designed water-fowls to fly in the air, and live in the water, she providently makes their feathers of such a texture, that they do not admit the water. Boyle.
PROVIDER. n. s. [from provide.] He who provides or procures.

Here's money for my meat,
I would have left it on the board, so soon
As I had made my meal, and parted thence With prayers for the provider. Shakefp.

PROVINCE. n. s. [from provincia, Fr. provincia, Latin.]

1. A conquered country; a country governed by a delegate.
Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer. Shak.
Greece, Italy and Sicily were divided into commonwealths, till swallowed up, and made provinces by Rome. Temple.
See them broke with toils, or sunk in ease,
Or infamous for plunder'd provinces. Pope.
2. The proper office or business of any one.
I am fit for honour's toughest task;
Nor ever yet found fooling was my province. Osway.
Nor can I alone sustain this day's province. More.
'Tis thine, what'er is pleasant, good or fair;
All nature is thy province, life thy care. Dryden.
'Tis not the pretor's province to bestow True freedom. Dryden's Persius.
The woman's province is to be careful in her economy, and chaste in her affection. Tatler.
3. A region; a tract.
Over many a tract
Of heav'n they march'd, and many a province wide. Milt.
Their understandings are cooped up in narrow bounds;
so that they never look abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

PROVINCIAL. adj. [from provincial, Fr. from provincia.]

1. Relating to a province.
The duke dare not more stretch
This finger of mine, than he dare rack his own;
His subject am I not, nor here provincial. Shakefp.
2. Appendant to the provincial country.
Some have delivered the policy of spirits, and left an account even to their provincial dominions. Brown.
3. Not of the mother country; rude; unpolished.
They build and treat with such magnificence,
That, like th' ambitious monarchs of the age,
They give the law to our provincial stage. Dryden.
A country 'quire having only the provincial accent upon his tongue, which is neither a fault, nor in his power to remedy, must marry a cast wench. Swift.
4. Belonging only to an archbishop's jurisdiction; not acumenical.
A law made in a provincial synod, is properly termed a provincial constitution. Ayliffe's Parergon.

PROVINCIAL. n. s. [from provincial, Fr. from provincia.] A spiritual governor.

Valignanus was provincial of the Jesuits in the Indies. Still.
TO PROVINCIATE. v. a. [from provincia.] To turn to a province. A word not in use.

When there was a design to provinciate the whole kingdom, Druma, though offered a canton, would not accept of it. Houel's Focal Fergil.

TO PROVINCE. v. n. [from provincer, Fr.] To lay a stock or branch of a vine in the ground to take root for more increase.

PROVISION. n. s. [from provisio, Fr. provisio, Latin.]

1. The act of providing beforehand.
Kalandar knew, that provision is the foundation of hospitality, and thrift the fewel of magnificence. Sidney.
2. Measures taken beforehand.
Five days we do allot thee for provision,
To shield thee from disasters of the world. Shakefp.
He preserved all points of humanity, in taking order and making provision for the relief of strangers distressed. Bacon.
The prudent part is to propole remedies for the present evils, and provisions against future events. Temple.
Religion lays the strictest obligations upon men, to make the best provision for their comfortable subsistence in this world, and their salvation in the next. Tillotson.
3. Accumulation of stores beforehand; stock collected.
Mendoza advertised, that he would valiantly defend the city, so long as he had any provision of victuals. Knolles.
In such abundance lies our choice,
As leaves a greater store of fruit untouched,
Still hanging incorruptible, till men
Grow up to their provision. Milton.
David, after he had made such vast provision of materials for the temple, yet because he had dipp't his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile. South.
4. Victuals; food; provender.
He caused provisions to be brought in. Clarendon.
Provisions laid in large for man or beast. Milton.
5. Stipulation; terms settled.
This law was only to reform the degenerate English, but there was no care taken for the reformation of the mere Irish,

PROVISIONAL. adj. [from provisio, Fr. from provisio.] Temporarily established; provided for present need.

The commendata semetipsis grew out of a natural equity, that, in the time of the patron's respite given him to present, the church should not be without a provisional pastor. Ayliffe.

PROVISIONALLY. adv. [from provisio.] By way of provision.

The abbot of St. Martin was born, was baptized, and declared a man provisionally, till time should shew what he would prove, nature had moulded him so untowardly. Locke.

PROVISO. n. s. [Latin: as, provisio rem ita se habetur esse.] Stipulation; caution; provisional condition.

This proviso is needful, that the sheriff may not have the like power of life as the marshal hath. Spenser.
Some will allow the church no further power, than only to exhort, and this but with a proviso too, that it extends not to such as think themselves too wise to be advised. South.
He doth deny his prisoners,
But with proviso and exception,
That we, at our own charge, shall ransom strait
His brother-in-law. Shakefp. Henry IV.

PROVOCATION. n. s. [from provocatio, Lat. provocatio, Fr.]

1. An act or cause by which anger is raised.
It is a fundamental law, in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their law. Bacon.
2. Tempt not my swelling rage
With black reproaches, scorn and provocation. Smith.

An appeal to a judge.
A provocation is every act, whereby the office of the judge or his assistance is asked; a provocation including both a judicial and an extrajudicial appeal. Ayliffe.

I know not whether, in the following passage, it be appeal or incitement.

The like effects may grow in all towards their pastor, and in their pastor towards every of them, between whom there daily and interchangeably pass in the hearing of God himself, and in the presence of his holy angels, so many heavenly exclamations, exultations, provocations, and petitions. Hobbes.

PROVOCATIVE. n. s. [from provocatio.] Any thing which revives a decayed or cloyed appetite.

There would be no variety of tastes to solicit his palate, and occasion excess, nor any artificial provocatives to relieve satiety. Ayliffe.

PROVOCATIVENESS. n. s. [from provocatio.] The quality of being provocative.

TO PROVOKE. v. a. [from provocare, Fr. provocare, Latin.]

1. To rouse; to excite by something offensive; to awake.
Ye provoke me unto wrath, burning incense unto other Gods. Jer. xlv. 8.
- Neither to provoke nor dread
New war provok'd. Milton.
To whet their courage, and their rage provoke. Dryden.
I neither fear, nor will provoke the war. Dryden.
2. To anger; to enrage; to offend; to incense.
Though often provoked, by the insolence of some of the bishops, to a dislike of their overmuch servour, his integrity to the king was without blemish. Clarendon.

Such acts
Of contumacy will provoke the highest. Milton.
Agamemnon provokes Apollo against them, whom he was willing to appease afterwards. Pope.

TO PROVOKE. v. n.

1. To cause; to promote.
Drink is a great provoker; it provokes and unprovokes. Shak.
One Petro covered up his patient with warm cloaths, and when the fever began a little to decline, gave him cold water to drink till he provoked sweat. Arbutnot.
2. To challenge.
He now provokes the sea-gods from the shore,
With envy Triton heard the martial sound,
And the bold champion for his challenge drown'd. Dryden.

TO PRODUCE. v. n.

1. To induce by motive; to move; to incite.
We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature hath provoked men to think of, and observe such a thing. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. To appeal. A Latinism.
Arius and Pelagius durst provoke
To what the centuries preceding spoke. Dryden.

TO PRODUCE. v. n.

1. To produce anger.
It was not your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death, but a provoking merit. Shakefp. King Lear.
The Lord abhorred them, because of the provoking of his sons. Deut. xxxii. 19.

If we consider man in such a loathsome and provoking condition, was it not love enough, that he was permitted to enjoy a being. Taylor.

PROVOKER. n. s. [from provocare.]

1. One that raises anger.
As in all civil insurrections, the ringleader is looked on with a peculiar severity, so, in this case, the first provoker has double portion of the guilt. Government of the Tongue.

PRO

2. Causer; promoter.
Drink, Sir, is a great provoker of nosleeping, sleep, and urine. Shakefp. Macbeth.

PROVOKINGLY. adv. [from provoking.] In such a manner as to raise anger.

When we see a man that yesterday kept a humiliation, today invading the possessions of his brethren, we need no other proof how hypocritically and provokingly he confessed his pride. Decay of Piety.

PROVOST. n. s. [from provost, Sax. provost, Fr. provosto, Ital. provostus, Lat.]

1. The chief of any body: as, the provost of a college.
2. The executioner of an army.

Kington, provost marshal of the king's army, was deemed not only cruel but inhuman in his executions. Hayward.

PROVOSTSHIP. n. s. [from provost.] The office of a provost.

C. Pisto first rose, and afterwards was advanced to the provostship of Rome by Tiberius. Hakewill.

PROV. n. s. [from prova, Fr. prova, Spanish; prova, Lat.] The head or forepart of a ship.

The sea-victory of Vespasian was a lady holding a palm in her hand, at her foot the prow of a ship. Peacbam.

Straight to the Dutch he turns his dreadful prow,
More fierce th' important quarrel to decide. Dryden.

PROV. adj. Valiant. Spenser.

PROV. n. s. [from prova, Italian; prova, Fr.] Bravery; valour; military gallantry.

Men of such provost, as not to know fear in themselves, and yet to teach it in others that should deal with them; for they had often their lives triumph over most terrible dangers, never dismayed, and ever fortunate. Sidney.

I hope
That your wisdom will direct my thought,
Or that your provosts can me yield relief. Fa. Queen.

By heav'n's mere grace, not by our provosts done. F. 2u.

Henry the fifth,
By his provosts conquered all France. Shakefp.

Nor should thy provosts want praise and esteem,
But that 'tis shewn in treason. Shakefp. Henry VI.

Those are they
First seen in acts of provost eminent,
And great exploits; but of true virtue void. Milton.

These beyond compare of mortal provosts. Milton.

Michael of celestial armies prince;
And thou in military provost next,
Gabriel! Milton's Par. Lost, l. vi.

The vigour of this arm was never vain,
And that my wonted provost I retain.

Witness these heaps of slaughter on the plain. Dryden.

These were the entertainments of the foster nations, that fell under the virtue and provost of the two last empires. Temp.

PROV. adj. [The superlative formed from provost, adj.]

1. Bravest; most valiant.
They be two of the provost knights on ground,
And oft approv'd in many a hard assay,
And eke of surest steel, that may be found,
Do arm yourself against that day them to confound. F. 2.
2. Brave; valiant.

The fairest of her sex, Angelica,
His daughter, fought by many provost knights. Milton.

TO PROWL. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is doubtful: the old dictionaries write prole, which the dreamer Cogitabund derives from prole, ready, quick. Skinner, a far more judicious etymologist, deduces it from prole, a diminutive formed by himself from prole, to prey, Fr. perhaps it may be formed, by accidental corruption, from prole.] To rove over.

He prowls each place, still in new colours deckt, Sucking one's ill, another to infect. Sidney.

TO PROWL. v. n. To wander for prey; to prey; to plunder.

The champion robbeth by night,
And provoleth and filcheth by daie. Tusser.

Nor do they bear so quietly the loss of some parcels confiscated abroad, as the great detriment which they suffer by some prowling vice-admiral or publick minister. Raleigh.

As when a prowling wolf,
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey. Milton.

Shall he, who looks erect on heav'n,
E'er stoop to mingle with the prowling herd,
And dip his tongue in gore. Thomson.

And here the fell attorney prowls for prey. Anon.

PROWLER. n. s. [from prowl.] One that roves about for prey.

On churchyards dear,
The disappointed prowlers fall, and dig
The shrouded body from the grave. Thomson.

PROXIMATE. adj. [from proximus, Lat.] Next in the series of ratiocination; near and immediate: opposed to remote and mediate.

Writing a theory of the deluge, we were to shew the proximate natural causes of it. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Substance is the remote genus of bird, because it agrees not only to all kinds of animals, but also to things inanimate;

PRU

but animal is the proximate or nearest genus of bird, because it agrees to fewest other things. Watts's Logick.

PROXIMATELY. adv. [from proximate.] Immediately; without intervention.

The consideration of our mind, which is incorporeal, and the contemplation of our bodies, which have all the characters of excellent contrivance; these alone easily and proximately guide us to the wife author of all things. Bentley.

PROXIME. adj. [from proximus, Lat.] Next; immediate.

A syllogism is made up of three propositions, and these of three terms variously joined: the three terms are called the remote matter of a syllogism, the three propositions the proxime or immediate matter of it. Watts's Logick.

PROXIMITY. n. s. [from proximitas, Fr. proximitas, from proximus, Lat.] Nearness.

When kingdoms have customably been carried by right of succession, according to proximity of blood, the violation of this course hath always been dangerous. Hayward.

If he plead proximity of blood,
That empty title is with ease withstood. Dryden.

Add the convenience of the situation of the eye, in respect of its proximity to the brain, the seat of common sense. Ray.

I can call to my assistance
Proximity, mark that! and distance. Prior.

Must we send to stab or poison all the popish princes, who have any pretended title to our crown by the proximity of blood? Swift's Miscellanies.

PROXY. n. s. [By contraction from procuracy.]

1. The agency of another.
2. The substitution of another; the agency of a substitute; appearance of a representative.
None acts a friend by a deputy, or can be familiar by proxy. South's Sermons.

Had Hyde thus sat by proxy too,
As Venus once was laid to do,
The painter must have search'd the skies,
To match the lustre of her eyes. Granville.

The person substituted or deputed.

A wife man will commit no business of importance to a proxy, where he may do it himself. L'Estrange.

PRUCE. n. s. [Pruce is the old name for Prussia.] Prussian leather.

Some leathern bucklers use
Of folded hides, and others shields of pruce. Dryden.

PRUDE. n. s. [from prude, Fr.] A woman over nice and scrupulous, and with false affectation.

The graver prude links downward to a gnome,
In search of mischief, still on earth to roam. Pope.

Not one careless thought intrudes,
Less modest than the speech of prudes. Swift.

PRUDENCE. n. s. [from prudencia, Fr. prudencia, Lat.] Wisdom applied to practice.

Under prudence is comprehended, that discrete, apt, suiting, and disposing as well of actions as words, in their due place, time and manner. Peacbam.

Prudence is principally in reference to actions to be done, and due means, order, season, and method of doing or not doing. Hale.

PRUDENT. adj. [from prudens, Fr. prudens, Lat.]

1. Practically wise.
The simple inherit folly, but the prudent are crowned with knowledge. Pr v. xiv. 18.
I have seen a son of Jesse, that is a man of war, and prudent in matters. 1 Sam. xvi. 18.

The monarch prevented all reply,
Prudent, lest others might offer. Milton.

2. Foreseeing by natural instinct.

So steers the prudent crane
Her annual voyage. Milton.

PRUDENTIAL. adj. [from prudens.] Eligible on principles of prudence.

He acts upon the surest and most prudential grounds, who, whether the principles, which he acts upon, prove true or false, yet secures a happy issue to his actions. South.

Motives are only prudential, and not demonstrative. Tillot.

These virtues, though of excellent use, some prudential rules it is necessary to take with them in practice. Rogers.

PRUDENTIALS. n. s. Maxims of prudence or practical wisdom.

Many stanzas, in poetick measures, contain rules relating to common prudentials, as well as to religion. Watts.

PRUDENTIALLY. adv. [from prudens.] Eligibility on principles of prudence.

Being incapable rightly to judge the prudence of affairs, they only gaze upon the visible success, and thereafter condemn or cry up the whole progression. Brown.

PRUDENTIALLY. adv. [from prudens.] According to the rules of prudence.

If he acts piously, soberly and temperately, he acts prudentially and safely. South's Sermons.

PRUDENTLY. adv. [from prudens.] Discreetly; judiciously.

These laws were so prudently framed, as they are found fit for all succeeding times. Bacon's Henry VII.

Such deep designs of empire does he lay
O'er them, whose cause he seems to take in hand;
And prudently would make them lords at sea;
To whom with ease he can give laws by land. Dryden.
PRUDERY. n. f. [from prude.] Overmuch nicety in conduct.
PRUDISH. adj. [from prude.] Affectedly grave.
I know you all expect, from seeing me,
Some formal lecture, spoke with prudish face. Garrick.
To PRUNE, v. a. [of unknown derivation.]
1. To lop; to divest trees of their superfluities.
So lop'd and pruned trees do flourish fair. Davies.
Let us ever extol
His bounty, following our delightful task,
To prune those growing plants, and tend these flow'rs. Milt.
What we by day
Lop overgrown, or prune, or prop, or bind,
One night with wanton growth derides, Tending to wild. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Horace will our superfluous branches prune,
Give us new rules, and fet our harp in tune. Waller.
You have no less right to correct me, than the same hand that raised a tree, has to prune it. Pope.
2. To clear from excrescencies.
His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloy his beak. Shakefp.
Many birds prune their feathers; and crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they receive in the relent of the air. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The muse, whose early voice you taught to sing,
Pierced her heights, and pruned her tender wing. Pope.
To PRUNE, v. n. To dress; to prick. A ludicrous word.
Every scribbling man
Grows a lop as fast as e'er he can,
Prunes up, and asks his oracle the glass,
If pink or purple best become his face. Dryden.
PRUNE. n. f. [prune, pruneau, Fr. prunum, Lat.] A dried plum.
In drying of pears and prunes in the oven, and removing of them, there is a like operation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
PRUNEL. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
PRUNELLO. n. f.
1. A kind of stuff of which the clergymen's gowns are made.
Worth makes the man, and want of it, the fellow;
The rest is all but leather or prunello. Pope.
2. [Prunelle, Fr.] A kind of plum. Ainsworth.
PRUNER. n. f. [from prune.] One that crops trees.
Left thy redundant juice
Should fading leaves, instead of fruits, produce,
The pruner's hand with letting blood must quench
Thy heat, and thy exuberant parts retrench. Denham.
PRUNIFEROUS. adj. [prunum and fero, Lat.] Plum bearing.
PRUNINGHOOK, n. f. A hook or knife used in lopping
PRUNINGKIFE. s. trees.
Let thy hand supply the pruningknife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers. Dryden.
No plough shall hurt the glebe, no pruninghook the vine.
Dryden's Virgil.
The cyder land obsequious still to thrones,
Her pruninghooks extended into swords. Philips.
PRURIENCE. n. f. [from prurio, Lat.] An itching or great PRURIENCY. s. desire or appetite to any thing. Swift.
PRURIENT. adj. [pruriens, Lat.] Itching. Ainsworth.
PRURIGINOUS. adj. [prurio, Lat.] Tending to an itch.
To PRY, v. n. [of unknown derivation.] To peep narrowly;
to inspect officiously, curiously, or impertinently.
I can counterfeit the deep tragedian,
Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side, Intending deep suspicion. Shakefp. Richard III.
I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When for his hand he had his two sons heads. Shakefp.
Watch thou, and wake when others be asleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state. Shakefp.
We of th' offending side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement;
And stop all sight holes, every loop, from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us. Shakefp.
He that pryeth in at her windows, shall also hearken at her doors. Ecluf. xiv. 23.
And pry
In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping. Milton.
We have naturally a curiosity to be prying and searching into forbidden secrets. L'Estrange.
Search well
Each grove and thicket, pry in ev'ry shape, Left hid in some th' arch hypocrite escape. Dryden.
I wak'd, and looking round the bow'r
Search'd ev'ry tree, and pry'd on ev'ry flow'r,
If any where by chance I might elpy
The rural poet of the melody. Dryden.
Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies, to find the milky way. Creech.
Actions are of so mixt a nature, that as men pry into them, so observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put contrary interpretations on them. Addison.

All these I frankly own without denying;
But where has this Praxiteles been prying. Addison.
PSALM. n. f. [psalm, psaume, Fr. ψαλμός.] A holy song.
The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly contain and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker, b. v. f. 37.
Sternhold was made groom of the chamber, for turning certain of David's psalms into verse. Peacham.
Those just spirits that wear victorious palms,
Hymns devote and holy psalms
Singing continually. Milton.
In another psalm, he speaks of the wisdom and power of God in the creation. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
PSALMIST. n. f. [psalmiste, Fr. from psalm.] Writer of holy songs.
How much more rational is this system of the psalmist, than the Pagans scheme in Virgil, where one deity is represented as railing a storm, and another as laying it? Addison.
PSALMODY. n. f. [psalmodia, Fr. ψαλμωδία.] The act or practice of singing holy songs.
PSALMOGRAPHY. n. f. [ψαλμός and γραφω.] The act of writing psalms.
PSALTER. n. f. [psalter, Fr. ψαλτήριον.] The volume of psalms; a palmbok.
PSALTERY. n. f. A kind of harp beaten with sticks.
The trumpets, faubuts, psalteries and fifes
Make the fun dance. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Praise with trumpets, pierce the skies,
Praise with harps and psalteries. Sandys's Paraph.
The sweet finger of Israel with his psaltery, loudly refounded the benefits of the almighty creator. Peacham.
Nought shall the psaltery and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.
PSEUDO. n. f. [from ψεύδω.] A prefix, which, being put before words, signifies false or counterfeit: as, pseudopistle, a counterfeit apostle.
PSEUDOGRAPHY. n. f. False writing.
I will not pursue the many pseudographies in use, but shew of how great concern the emphasis were, if rightly used. Hall.
PSEUDODOGY. n. f. [ψευδολογία.] Falsehood of speech.
It is not according to the found rules of pseudology, to report of a pious prince, that he neglects his devotion, but you may report of a merciful prince, that he has pardoned a criminal who did not deserve it. Arbuthnot.
PSHAU. interj. An expression of contempt.
A peevish fellow has some reason for being out of humour, or has a natural incapacity for delight, and therefore disturbs all with pithes and pschaws. Spectator, N° 438.
PTISAN. n. f. [ptisane, Fr. πτιζάνη.] A medical drink made of barley decocted with raisins and liquorice.
Thrice happy were those golden days of old,
When dear as Burgundy the ptisans fold;
When patients chose to die with better will,
Than breathe and pay the apothecary's bill. Garth.
In fevers the alients prescribed by Hippocrates, were ptisans and cream of barley. Arbuthnot.
PTYALISM. n. f. [ptyalismos, Fr. πτύσσειν.] Salivation; effusion of spitte.
PTYSMAGOGUE. n. f. [πύσματος and αγωγή.] A medicine which discharges spitte. Diid.
PUBERTY. n. f. [puberté, Fr. pubertas, Lat.] The time of life in which the two sexes begin first to be acquainted.
The cause of changing the voice at the years of puberty seemeth to be, for that when much of the moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the ipermatical vessels, it leaveth the body more hot than it was, whence cometh the dilatation of the pipes. Bacon.
All the carnivorous animals would have multiplied exceedingly, before these children that escaped could come to the age of puberty. Bentley's Sermon.
PUBESCENCE. n. f. [from pubesco, Lat.] The state of arriving at puberty.
Solon divided it into ten septenaries; in the first is dentation or falling of teeth, in the second pubescence. Brown.
PUBESCENT. adj. [from pubescens, Lat.] Arriving at puberty.
That the women are menstruent, and the men pubescent at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth. Brown.
PUBLICAN. n. f. [from publicus, Lat.]
1. A toll gatherer.
As Jesus sat at meat, many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him. Math. ix. 10.
2. A man that keeps a house of general entertainment. In low language.
PUBLICATION. n. f. [publico, Lat.]
1. The act of publishing; the act of notifying to the world;
divulgation; proclamation.
For the instruction of all men to eternal life, it is necessary, that the sacred and saving truth of God be openly published unto them, which open publication of heavenly mysteries is by an excellency termed preaching. Hooker.
2. Edition;

PUB

2. Edition; the act of giving a book to the publick.
An imperfect copy having been offered to a bookseller, you consented to the publication of one more correct. Pope.
The publication of these papers was not owing to our folly, but that of others. Swift.
PUBLIC. adj. [public, publique, Fr. publicus, Lat.]
1. Belonging to a state or nation; not private.
By following the law of private reason, where the law of publick should take place, they breed disturbance. Hooker.
Of royal maids how wretched is the fate,
Born only to be victims of the state;
Our hopes, our wishes, all our passions try'd
For publick use, the slaves of others pride. Granvil.
Have we not able counsellors, hourly watching over the publick weal. Swift.
2. Open; notorious; generally known.
Joseph being a just man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily. Matth.
3. General; done by many.
A dismal universal his, the sound Of publick scorn. Milton.
4. Regarding not private interest, but the good of the community.
They were publick hearted men, as they paid all taxes, so they gave up all their time to their country's service, without any reward. Clarendon.
All nations that grew great out of little or nothing, did so merely by the publick mindness of particular persons. South.
A good magistrate must be endued with a publick spirit, that is with such an excellent temper, as sets him loose from all selfish views, and makes him endeavour towards promoting the common good. Arbuthnot.
5. Open for general entertainment.
The income of the commonwealth is raised on such as have money to spend at taverns and publick houses. Addison.
PUBLICK. n. f. [from publicus, Lat. le publique, Fr.]
1. The general body of mankind, or of a state or nation; the people.
The publick is more disposed to censure than to praise. Add.
2. Open view; general notice.
Philosophy, though it likes not a gaudy dress, yet, when it appears in publick, must have so much complacency, as to be clothed in the ordinary fashion. Locke.
In private grief, but with a careless scorn;
In publick seem to triumph, not to mourn. Granville.
In publick 'tis they hide,
Where none distinguish. Pope.
PUBLICKLY. adv. [from publick.]
1. In the name of the community.
This has been so sensibly known by trading nations, that great rewards are publickly offered for its supply. Addison.
2. Openly; without concealment.
Sometimes also it may be private, communicating to the judges some things not fit to be publickly delivered. Bacon.
PUBLICNESS. n. f. [from publick.]
1. State of belonging to the community.
The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it. Boyle.
2. Openness; state of being generally known or publick.
PUBLICK-SPIRITED. adj. [publick and spirit.] Having regard to the general advantage above private good.
'Tis enough to break the neck of all honest purposes, to kill all generous and publick-spirited motions in the conception. L'Estrange.
These were the publick-spirited men of their age, that is,
patrons of their own interest. Dryden.
Another publick-spirited project, which the common enemy could not foresee, might set king Charles on the throne. Add.
It was generous and publick-spirited in you, to be of the kingdom's side in this dispute, by shewing, without reserve, your disapprobation of Wood's design. Swift.
To PUBLISH, v. a. [publier, Fr. publico, Lat.]
1. To discover to mankind; to make generally and openly known; to proclaim; to divulge.
How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that You thus have published me. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
His commission from God and his doctrine tend to the impressing the necessity of that reformation, which he came to publish. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Suppose he should relent,
And publish grace to all. Milton.
Th' unwearied fun, from day to day,
Does his Creator's pow'r display,
And publishes to every land
The work of an almighty hand. Addison's Spectator.
2. To put forth a book into the world.
If I had not unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it by me. Digby.
PUBLISHER. n. f. [from publish.]
1. One who makes publick or generally known.

PUD

Love of you
Hath made me publisher of this pretence. Shakefp.
The holy lives, the exemplary sufferings of the publishers of this religion, and the surpassing excellence of that doctrine which they published. Atterbury.
2. One who puts out a book into the world.
A collection of poems appeared, in which the publisher has given me some things that did not belong to me. Prior.
PUCE' LAGE. n. f. [French.] A state of virginity. Diid.
PUCK. n. f. [perhaps the same with pug.] Some spirit among the faeries, common in romances.
O gentle puck, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian swain. Shakefp.
Turn your cloaks,
Quoth he, for puck is busy in these oaks,
And this is fairy ground. Corbet.
PUCKBALL or puckst. n. f. [from puck the fairy, a fairy's ball.]
A kind of mushroom full of dust. Diid.
To PUCKER. v. a. [from puck the fairy; as elocks, from elock, or from puck, a pocket or hollow.] To gather into corruga-tions; to contract into folds or plications.
I saw an hideous spectre; his eyes were sunk into his head, his face pale and withered, and his skin puckered up in wrinkles. Spectator, N° 192.
A ligature above the part wounded is pernicious, as it
puckers up the intestines, and disorders its situation. Sharp.
PUDDER. n. f. [This is commonly written potter. See POTTER. This is most probably derived by Mr. Lye from fudor, flandrick, a rapid motion.] A tumult; a turbulent and irregular bustle.
Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pudder o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies. Shakefp. King Lear.
What a pudder is made about essences, and how much is all knowledge pestered by the careless use of words? Locke.
To PUDDER, v. n. [from the noun.] To make a tumult;
to make a bustle.
Mathematicians, abstracting their thoughts from names, and setting before their minds the ideas themselves, have avoided a great part of that perplexity, puddering and confusion, which has so much hindered knowledge. Locke.
To PUDDER. v. a. To perplex; to disturb; to confound.
He that will improve every matter of fact into a maxim, will abound in contrary observations, that can be of no other use but to perplex and pudder him. Locke.
PUDDING. n. f. [potten, Welsh, an intestine; boudin, French;
puding, Swedish.]
2. A kind of food very variously compounded, but generally made of meal, milk, and eggs.
Salads, and eggs, and lighter fare
Tune the Italian spark's guitar;
And if I take Dan Congreve right,
Pudding and beef make Britons fight. Prior.
3. The gut of an animal.
He'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days; the king has kill'd his heart. Shakefp. Henry V.
As sure as his guts are made of puddings. Shakefp.
3. A bowel stuffed with certain mixtures of meal and other ingredients.
Mind neither good nor bad, nor right nor wrong,
But eat your pudding, slave, and hold your tongue. Prior.
PUDDINGPIE. n. f. [pudding and pie.] A pudding with meat baked in it.
Some cry the covenant, instead
Of puddingpies and gingerbread. Hudibras.
PUDDINGTIME. n. f. [pudding and time.]
1. The time of dinner; the time at which pudding, anciently the first dish, is set upon the table.
2. Nick of time; critical minute.
Mars that still protects the stout,
In puddingtime came to his aid. Hudibras.
PUDLE. n. f. [from puceolus, Lat. Skimer; from pail, dirt, old Bavarian, Junius; hence pool.] A small muddy lake;
a dirty plash.
The Hebrews drink of the well-head, the Greeks of the stream, and the Latins of the puddle. Hall.
Thou did'st drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.
A physician cured madmen thus: they were tied to a stake, and then set in a puddle, 'till brought to their wits. L'Estr.
Treading where the treacherous puddle lay,
His heels flew up; and on the grassy floor
He fell, besmeard with filth. Dryden's Virgil.
Happy was the man, who was sent on an errand to the most remote street, which he performed with the greatest alacridy, ran through every puddle, and took care to return covered with dirt. Addison's Freeholder.
To PUDGLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To muddy; to pollute with dirt; to mix dirt and water.
As if I saw my fun shine in a puddled water, I cried out of nothing but Mopla. Sidney.

PUF

- Some unhatch'd practice
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. Shakefp. Othello.
His beard they fling'd off with brand of fire,
And ever as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair. Shakefp.
The noblest blood of Africk
Runs in my veins, a purer stream than thine;
For, though derived from the same source, thy current Is puddl'd and defil'd with tyranny. Dryden.
PUDDLY, adj. [from puddle.] Muddy; dirty; miry.
Limy, or thick puddly water killeth them. Carew.
PUDDOCK or PURRACK, n. f. [for puddock or parrock.] A provincial word for a small inclosure. Diët.
PUDECY, n. f. [pudens, Lat.] Modesty; shamefacedness.
A pudency so rosy, the sweet view on't Might well have warm'd old Saturn. Shakefp.
PUDICITY, n. f. [pudicitia, Fr. from pudicitia, Lat.] Modesty; chastity. Diët.
PUEFELOW, n. f. A partner.
This carnal cur
Preys on the ill of his mother's body;
And makes her puefellow with others moan. Shakefp.
PUERILE, adj. [puerile, Fr. puerilis, Lat.] Childish; boyish.
I looked upon the mansion with a veneration mixt with a pleasure, that represented her to me in those puerile amusements. Pope.
PUERILITY, n. f. [puerilité, Fr. from puerilitas, Lat.] Childishness; boyishness.
A reserve of puerility not shaken off from school. Brown.
Some men imagining themselves possessed with a divine fury, often fall into toys and trifles, which are only puerilities. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
PUR, n. f. A kind of water fowl.
Among the first sort are coots, fanderlings and puets. Car.
The fish have enemies enough; as otters, the cormorant and the pur. Walton's Angler.
PUFF, n. f. [pof, Dutch, a blast which swells the cheeks.]
1. A quick blast with the mouth.
In garret vile, he with a warming puff Regales chill'd fingers. Philips.
2. A small blast of wind.
The Rosemary, in the days of Henry VII. with a sudden puff of wind stooped her side, and took in water at her ports in such abundance, as that she instantly sunk. Raleigh.
The naked breathless body lies,
To every puff of wind a slave,
At the beck of every wave,
That once perhaps was fair, rich, stout and wise. Flatman.
A puff of wind blows off cap and wig. L'Estrange.
There fierce winds o'er dusky vallies blow,
Whole every puff bears empty shades away. Dryden.
With one fierce puff he blows the leaves away,
Expos'd the self-discover'd infant lay. Dryden.
3. A mushroom.
Any thing light and porous: as, puff paste. Ainsworth.
4. Something to sprinkle powder on the hair. Ainsworth.
TO PUFF, v. n. [puffen, Dutch.]
1. To swell the cheeks with wind.
2. To blow with a quick blast.
Wherefore do you follow her,
Like foggy South puffing with wind and rain. Shakefp.
Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakefp.
3. To blow with scornfulness.
Some puff at these instances, as being such as were under a different œconomy of religion, and consequently not directly pertinent to ours. South's Sermons.
It is really to defy heaven, to puff at damnation, and bid omnipotence do its worst. South.
4. To breathe thick and hard.
Seldshewn flamins
Do prefs among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar station. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
The als comes back again, puffing and blowing, from the chafe. L'Estrange.
A true son of the church
Came puffing with his greasy bald-pate choir,
And fumbling o'er his beads. Dryden.
5. To do or move with hurry, tumour, or tumultuous agitation.
More unconstant than the wind, who woes
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the North,
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping South. Shakefp.
Then came brave glory puffing by
In filks that whistled, who but he?
He scarce allow'd me half an eye. Herbert.
6. To swell with the wind.
A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, till the detonation be quite ended; unless the puffing matter blow the coal out of the crucible. Boyle.

PUI

- TO PUFF, v. a.
1. To swell as with wind.
Let him fall by his own greatness,
And puff him up with glory, till it swell
And break him. Denham's Sophy.
Flattering of others, and boasting of ourselves, may be referred to lying; the one to please others, and puff them up with self-conceit; the other to gain more honour than is due to ourselves. Ray on the Creation.
2. To drive or agitate with blasts of wind.
I have seen the cannon,
When it has blown his ranks into the air,
And from his arm puff his own brother. Shakefp.
Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry boar chafed with sweat?
I h' unerring fun by certain signs declares,
When the South projects a stormy day,
And when the clearing North will puff the clouds away. Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.
Why must the winds all hold their tongue?
If they a little breath should raise,
Would that have spoil'd the poet's song,
Or puff'd away the monarch's praise? Prior.
I have been endeavouring very busily to raise a friendship, which the first breath of any ill-natured by-stander could puff away. Pope.
3. To drive with a blast of breath scornfully.
When the dances in the wind,
And shakes her wings, and will not stay,
I puff the prostitute away;
The little or the much she gave is quietly resign'd. Dry.
4. To swell or blow up with pride.
The attendants of courts engage them in quarrels of juridiction, being truly parafiti curia, in puffing a court up beyond her bounds for their own advantage. Bacon.
5. To swell or elate with pride.
His look like a coxcomb up puff'd with pride. Tusser.
This army, led by a tender prince,
Whole spirit with divine ambition puff,
Makes mouths at the invisible event. Shakefp. Hamlet.
Think not of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puff'd up one against another. 1 Cor. iv. 6.
Your ancestors, who puff your mind with pride,
Did not your honour, but their own advance. Dryden.
Who stands fastest; tell me, is it he
That spreads and swells in puff'd posterity?
The Phœacians were so puff'd up with their constant felcity, that they thought nothing impossible. Broom.
PUFFER, n. f. [from puff.] One that puffs.
PUFFIN, n. f. [puffino, Italian.]
1. A water fowl.
Among the first sort, we reckon the dipchick, murre, creyfers, curlews and puffins. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
2. A kind of fish.
3. A kind of fungus filled with dust.
PUFFINGAPPLE, n. f. A sort of apple. Ainsworth.
PUFFINGLY, adv. [from puffing.]
1. Tumidly; with swell.
2. With shortness of breath.
PUFFY, adj. [from puff.]
1. Windy; flatulent.
Emphysema is a light puffy tumour, easily yielding to the pressure of your fingers, and ariseth again in the infant you take them off. Wifeman's Surgery.
2. Tumid; turgid.
An unjudicious poet, who aims at loftiness, runs easily into the swelling puffy stile, because it looks like greatness. Dryden.
PUG, n. f. [piza, Saxon, a girl. Skimmer.] A kind name of a monkey, or any thing tenderly loved.
Upon setting him down, and calling him pug, I found him to be her favourite monkey. Addison's Spectator.
PUGGERED, adj. [perhaps for pucker'd.] Crowded; complicated. I never found this word in any other passage.
Nor are we to cavil at the red pugged attire of the turkey, and the long excrescence that hangs down over his bill, when he swells with pride. More's Antidote against Atheism.
PUGH, interj. [corrupted from puff, or borrowed from the sound.]
A word of contempt.
PUGIL, n. f. [pugille, Fr.] What is taken up between the thumb and two first fingers.
Take violets, and infuse a good pugil of them in a quart of vinegar. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
PUGNACIOUS, adj. [pugnax, Lat.] Inclination to fight; quarrelsome; fighting.
PUGNACITY, n. f. [from pugnax, Lat.] Quarrelsomeness;
inclination to fight.
PUISNE, adj. [puis nê, French. It is commonly spoken and written puis. See PUNY.]
1. Young; younger; later in time.
When the place of a chief judge becomes vacant, a puisne judge, who hath approved himself deserving, should be preferred. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
He

- If he undergo any alteration, it must be in time, or of a puisne date to eternity. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. Puffy; inconsiderable; small.
A puisne tilter, that purs his horse but one side, breaks his flank like a noble goole. Shakefp. As You Like it.
PUISSANCE, n. f. [puissance, Fr.] Power; strength; force.
The chariots were drawn not by the strength of horses, but by the puissance of men. Destruction of Troy.
Grandfies, babies and old women;
Or lack, or not arriv'd to, pith and puissance. Shakefp.
Look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the pow'r and puissance of the king. Shakefp.
Our puissance is our own; our own right hand Shall teach us highest deeds. Milton.
PUISSANT, adj. [puissant, Fr.] Powerful; strong; forcible.
The queen is coming with a puissant host. Shakefp.
Told the most piteous tale of Lear
That ever ear receiv'd; which in recounting
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life Began to crack. Shakefp. King Lear.
For piety renew'd and puissant deeds. Milton.
The climate of Syria, the far distance from the strength of Christendom, and the near neighbourhood of those that were most puissant among the Mahometans, caus'd that famous enterprise, after a long continuance of terrible war, to be quite abandoned. Raleigh's Essays.
PUISSANTLY, adv. [from puissant.] Powerfully; forcibly.
PUKE, n. f. [of uncertain derivation.] Vomit; medicine causing vomit.
TO PUKE, v. n. To spew; to vomit.
The infant
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms. Shakefp.
PUKER, n. f. [from puke.] Medicine causing a vomit.
The puker rue,
The sweetner salafra are added too. Garth.
PULCHRITUDE, n. f. [pulchritudo, Lat.] Beauty; grace;
handsomeness; quality opposite to deformity.
Neither will it agree unto the beauty of animals; wherein there is an approved pulchritudo. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Pulchritudo is conveyed by the outward senses unto the soul, but a more intellectual faculty is that which refines it. More.
By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the pulchritudo of their souls make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. South.
That there is a great pulchritudo and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers and fruits of plants, is attested by the general verdict of mankind. Ray on the Creation.
TO PULE, v. n. [pauler, Fr.]
1. To cry like a chicken.
Let the songs be loud and cheerful, and not chirpings or pulings; let the music likewise be sharp and loud. Bacon.
2. To whine; to cry; to whimper.
To speak puling like a beggar at Hallomaf's. Shakefp.
To have a wretched puling fool,
A whining mammet, in her fortune's tender,
To answer, I'll not wed. Shakefp. Romeo and Juliet.
Weak puling things unable to sustain
Their share of labour, and their bread to gain. Dryden.
When ice covered the water, the child bathed his legs; a nd when he began this custom, was puling and tender. Locke.
This puling whining harlot rules his reason,
And prompts his zeal for Edward's bastard brood. Rowe.
PULICK, n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
PULICOSE, adj. [pulicosus, puler, Latin.] Abounding with fleas. Diët.
PULIOL, n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.
TO PULL, v. a. [pullian, Saxon.]
1. To draw violently towards one.
What they seem to offer us with the one hand, the same with the other they pull back. Hooker.
He put forth his hand, and pulled the dove in. Gen. viii. 9.
His hand which he put forth dried up, so that he could not pull it in again. 1 Kings xiii. 4.
Pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter. Jer. vii. 11.
They pulled away the shoulder and stopped their ears. Zech.
Ill fortune never crush'd that man, whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have counsel'd my friends to place all things else gave them to, as the night take them from them, not pull them. Benj. Johnson's Discovery.
2. To draw forcibly.
He was not so desirous of wars, as without just cause of his own to pull them upon him. Hayward.
A boy came in great hurry to pull off my boots. Swift.
3. To pluck; to gather.
When bounteous Autumn rears his head,
He joys to pull the ripen'd pear. Dryden.
Flax pulled in the bloom, will be whiter and stronger than if let stand till the seed is ripe. Mortimer.
4. To tear; to rend.
He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces;
he hath made me desolate. Lam. iii. 2.

PUL

- Ye pull off the robe with the garment from them that pass by securely. Mic. ii. 8.
I rent my cloaths, and pulled off the hair from off my head. 1 Esdr. viii. 71.
5. TO PULL down. To subvert; to demolish.
Although it was judg'd in form of a statue, that he should be banish'd, and his whole estate confiscated, and his houses pulled down, yet his case even then had no great blot of ignomy. Bacon.
In political affairs, as well as mechanical, it is far easier to pull down than build up; for that structure, which was above ten summers a building, and that by no mean artists, was destroyed in a moment. Howel's Vocal Forest.
When God is said to build or pull down, 'tis not to be understood of an house; God builds and unbuilds worlds. Burn.
6. TO PULL down. To degrade.
He begs the gods to turn blind fortune's wheel,
To raise the wretched, and pull down the proud. Roscom.
What tide has this queen but lawless force?
And force must pull her down. Dryden.
7. TO PULL up. To extirpate; to eradicate.
What censure, doubting thus of innate principles, I may deserve from men, who will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge, I cannot tell; I persuade myself, that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays those foundations surer. Locke.
PULL, n. f. [from the verb.] The act of pulling; pluck.
This wrestling pull between Corineus and Gogmagog is reported to have befallen at Dover. Carew.
Duke of Glo'ter, scarce himself,
That bears so threw'd a main; two pulls at once;
His lady banish'd, and a limb lost off. Shakefp.
I awak'd with a violent pull upon the ring, which was fastened at the top of my box. Gulliver's Travels.
PULLER, n. f. [from pull.] One that pulls.
Shameless Warwick, peace?
Proud fetter up and puller down of kings. Shakefp.
PULLEN, n. f. [pulain, old Fr.] Poultry. Bailey.
PULLET, n. f. [poulet, Fr.] A young hen.
Brew me a pottle of sack finely.
—With eggs, Sir?
—Simple of itself; I'll no pullet sperm in my brewage. Sha.
I felt a hard tumour on the right side, the bigness of a pullet's egg. Wifeman's Surgery.
They died not because the pullets would not feed, but because the devil forefaw their death, he contriv'd that abstinence in them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PULLEY, n. f. [pouliè, Fr.] A small wheel turning on a pivot, with a furrow on its outside in which a rope runs.
Nine hundred of the strongest men were employed to draw up these cords by many pulleys fastened on the poles, and, in three hours, I was raised and slung into the engine. Gulliver.
Here pullees make the pond'rous oak ascend. Gay.
TO PULLULATE, v. n. [pullulo, Lat. pulluler, Fr.] To germinate; to bud.
PULMONARY, adj. [from pulmo, Lat.] Belonging to the lungs.
The force of the air upon the pulmonary artery is but small in respect of that of the heart. Arbutnot.
Cold air, by its immediate contact with the surface of the lungs, is capable of producing defluxions upon the lungs, ulcerations, and all sorts of pulmonick consumptions. Arbutnot.
PULMONARY, n. f. [pulmonaire, Fr.] The herb lungwort. Ainsf.
PULMONICK, adj. [pulmo, Lat.] Belonging to the lungs.
An ulcer of the lungs may be a cause of pulmonick consumption, or consumption of the lungs. Harvey.
PULP, n. f. [pulpa, Lat. pulpe, Fr.]
1. Any soft mass.
The jaw bones have no marrow severed, but a little pulp of marrow diffused. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. The soft part of fruit; the part of fruit distinct from the seeds and rind.
The favoury pulp they chew, and in the rind,
Still as they thirsted, scoop the brimming stream. Milton.
Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seed, it serves also by a secondary intention for the sultenance of man and other animals. Ray.
The grub
Oft unobserv'd invades the vital core,
Pernicious tenant, and her secret cave
Enlarges hourly, preying on the pulp. Philips.
PULPIT, n. f. [pul'itum, Lat. pulpitre, pupitre, Fr.]
1. A place raised on high, where a speaker stands.
Produce his body to the market-place,
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
2. The higher desk in the church where the sermon is pronounced; distinct from the lower desk where prayers are read.
We see on our theatres, the examples of vice rewarded, yet it ought not to be an argument against the art, any more than the impieties of the pulpit in the late rebellion. Dryden.
Sir

PUL

Sir Roger has given a handsome pulpit cloth, and raised in the communion table. Addison's Spectator, N° 112.
Bishops were not wont to preach out of the pulpit. Ayliffe.
Pulpits their sacred fatyr learn'd to spare,
And vice admir'd to find a flatt'rer there. Pope.

PULPOUS. adj. [from pulp.] Soft.

The redstreak's pulpous fruit
With gold irradiate, and vermilion shines. Philips.

PULPOUSNESS. n. f. [from pulpous.] The quality of being pulposus.

PULPY. adj. [from pulp.] Soft; pappy.

In the walnut and plumbs is a thick pulpy covering, then a hard shell, within which is the seed. Ray on the Creation.

Putrefaction destroys the specifick difference of one vegetable from another, converting them into a pulpy substance of an animal nature. Arbutnot on Aliments.

PULSATION. n. f. [pulsation, Fr. pulsatio, from pulse, Lat.] The act of beating or moving with quick strokes against any thing opposing.

This original of the left vein was thus contrived, to avoid the pulsation of the great artery. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The commotions of the mind and body oppres the heart, whereby it is choked and obstructed in its pulsation. Harvey.

PULSATOR. n. f. [from pulse, Lat.] A striker; a beater.

PULSE. n. f. [pulsus, Lat.]

1. The motion of an artery as the blood is driven through it by the heart, and as it is perceived by the touch.

Pulse is thus accounted for: when the left ventricle of the heart contracts, and throws its blood into the great artery, the blood in the artery is not only thrust forward towards the extremities, but the channel of the artery is likewise dilated; because fluids, when they are pressed, press again to all sides, and their pressure is always perpendicular to the sides of the containing vessels; but the coats of the artery, by any small impetus, may be distended; therefore, upon the contraction or systole of the heart, the blood from the left ventricle will not only press the blood in the artery forwards, but both together will distend the sides of the artery: when the impetus of the blood against the sides of the artery ceases; that is, when the left ventricle ceases to contract, then the spiral fibres of the artery, by their natural elasticity, return again to their former state, and contract the channel of the artery, till it is again dilated by the diastole of the heart: this diastole of the artery is called its pulse, and the time the spiral fibres are returning to their natural state, is the distance between two pulses: this pulse is in all the arteries of the body at the same time; for, while the blood is thrust out of the heart into the artery, the artery being full, the blood must move in all the arteries at the same time; and because the arteries are conical, and the blood moves from the basis of the cone to the apex, therefore the blood must strike against the sides of the vessels, and consequently every point of the artery must be dilated at the same time that the blood is thrown out of the left ventricle of the heart; and as soon as the elasticity of the spiral fibres can overcome the impetus of the blood, the arteries are again contracted: thus two causes operating alternately, the heart and fibres of the arteries, keep the blood in a continual motion: an high pulse is either vehement or strong, but if the dilatation of the artery does not rise to its usual height, it is called a low or weak pulse; but if between its dilatations there passes more time than usual, it is called a slow pulse: again, if the coats of an artery feel harder than usual from any cause whatsoever, it is called an hard pulse; but if by any contrary cause they are softer, then it is called a soft pulse. Quincy.

Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shakespeare.

The prosperity of the neighbour kingdoms is not inferior to that of this, which, according to the pulse of states, is a great diminution of their health. Clarendon.

My body is from all diseases free;
My temperate pulse does regularly beat. Dryden.

If one drop of blood remain in the heart at every pulse, those, in many pulses, will grow to a considerable mass. Arb.

2. Oscillation; vibration; alternate expansion and contraction; alternate approach and recession.

The vibrations or pulses of this medium, that they may cause the alternate fits of easy transmission and easy reflexion, must be swifter than light, and by consequence above seven hundred thousand times swifter than sounds. Newton.

3. To feel one's PULSE. To try or know one's mind artfully.

4. [From pull.] Leguminous plants.

With Elijah he partook,
Or as a guest with Daniel at his pulse. Milton.

Mortals, from your fellows blood abstain!
While corn and pulse by nature are bestow'd. Dryden.

Tares are as advantageous to land as other pulses. Mort.

TO PULSE. v. n. [from the noun.] To beat as the pulse.

The heart, when separated wholly from the body in some animals, continues still to pulse for a considerable time. Ray.

PULSION. n. f. [from pulsus, Lat.] The act of driving or of forcing forward: in opposition to suction or traction.

Admit it might use the motion of pulsion, yet it could never that of attraction. More's Divine Dialogues.

By attraction we do not here understand what is improperly called so, in the operations of drawing, sucking and pumping, which is really pulsion and traction. Bentley.

PULVERABLE. adj. [from pulveris, Lat.] Possible to be reduced to dust.

In making the first ink, I could by filtration separate a pretty store of a black pulverable substance that remained in the fire. Boyle on Colours.

PULVERIZATION. n. f. [from pulveris, Lat. pulveriser, Fr.] The act of powdering; reduction to dust or powder.

TO PULVERIZE. v. a. [from pulveris, Lat. pulveriser, Fr.] To reduce to powder; to reduce to dust.

If the experiment be carefully made, the whole mixture will shoot into fine crystals, that seem to be of an uniform substance, and are consistent enough to be even brittle, and to endure to be pulverized and sifted. Boyle.

PULVERULENCE. n. f. [pulverulentia, Lat.] Dustiness; abundance of dust.

PULVIL. n. f. [pulvillum, Lat.] Sweet scents.

The toilette, nursery of charms,
Completely furnish'd with bright beauty's arms,
The patch, the powder-box, pulvil, perfumes. Gay.

TO PULVIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To sprinkle with perfumes in powder.

Have you pulvilled the coachman and postilion, that they may not stink of the stable. Congreve's Way of the World.

PUMICE. n. f. [pumex, pumicis, Lat.]

The pumice is evidently a slag or cinder of some fossil, originally bearing another form, and only reduced to this state by the violent action of fire: it is a lax and spongy matter full of little pores and cavities, found in masses of different sizes and shapes, of a pale, whitish, grey colour: the pumice is found in many parts of the world, but particularly about the burning mountains Etna, Vesuvius and Hecla: it is used as a dentifrice. Hill's Materia Medica.

So long I shot, that all was spent,
Though pumice stones I hastily hent,
And threw; but nought avail'd. Spenser.

Etna and Vesuvius, which consist upon sulphur, shoot forth smoke, ashes and pumice, but no water. Bacon.

Near the Lucrine lake,
Steams of sulphur raise a stifling heat,
And through the pores of the warm pumice sweat. Addison.

PUMMEL. n. f. See POMMEL.

PUMP. n. f. pompe, Dutch and French.]

1. An engine by which water is drawn up from wells: its operation is performed by the pressure of the air.

A pump grown dry will yield no water, unless you pour a little water into it first. More's Antidote against Atheism.

In the framing that great ship built by Hiero, Athenues mentions this instrument as being instead of a pump, by the help of which one man might easily drain out the water though very deep. Wilkins's Deedalus.

These pumps may be made single with a common pump handle, for one man to work them, or double for two. Martinet.

2. A shoe with a thin sole and low heel.

Get good fittings to your beards, new ribbons to your pumps. Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd i' th' heel. Shakespeare.

Follow me this jest, now, till thou hast worn out thy pump, that when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain singular. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.

Thalia's ivy shows her prerogative over comical poetry; her mask, mantle and pumps are ornaments belonging to the stage. Peachment.

The water and sweat
Splish splash in their pumps. Swift's Michel.

TO PUMP. v. n. [pompen, Dutch.] To work a pump; to throw out water by a pump.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.

TO PUMP. v. a.

1. To raise or throw out by means of a pump.

2. To examine artfully by fly interrogatories, so as to draw out any secrets or concealments.

The one's the learned knight, seek out,
And pump them what they come about. Hudibras.

Ask him what passes
Amongst his brethren, he'll hide nothing from you;
But pump not me for politics. Osway's Venice Preserv'd.

PUMPER. n. f. [from pump.] The person or the instrument that pumps.

The flame lasted about two minutes, from the time the pumper began to draw out air. Boyle.

PUMPTION. n. f. A plant.

The flower of the pumption consists of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, expanded at the top, and cut into several segments: of these flowers some are male, and some female, as in the cucumbers and melons: the female flowers grow upon the top of the embryo, which afterwards becomes an oblong or round fleshy fruit, having sometimes an hard, rugged and uneven uneven rind, with knobs and furrows, and is often divided into three parts, inclosing flat seeds that are edged or rimmed about as it were with a ring, and fixed to a spongy placenta. Miller.

We'll use this gross watry pumption, and teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

PUN. n. f. [I know not whence this word is to be deduced: to pun, is to grind or beat with a posse; can pun mean an empty sound, like that of a mortar beaten, as clench, the old word for pun, seems only a corruption of clink?] An equivocation; a quibble; an explication where a word has at once different meanings.

It is not the word, but the figure that appears on the medal: cuniculus may stand for a rabbit or a mine, but the picture of a rabbit is not the picture of a mine: a pun can be no more engraven, than it can be translated. Addison.

But fill their purse, our poet's work is done,
Alike to them by pathos, or by pun. Pope.

TO PUN. v. n. [from the noun.] To quibble; to use the same word at once in different senses.

The hand and head were never lost, of those Who dealt in doggerel, or who pun'd in prose. Dryden.

You would be a better man, if you could pun like Sir Tritram. Tatler, N° 57.

TO PUNCH. v. a. [poinçonner, Fr.] To bore or perforate by driving a sharp instrument.

When I was mortal, my anointed body
By thee was punched full of deadly holes. Shakespeare.

By reason of its constitution it continued open, as I have seen a hole punched in leather. Wijeman's Surgery.

Your work will sometimes require to have holes punched in it at the forge, you must then make a steel punch, and harden the point of it without tempering. Moxon.

The fly may, with the hollow and sharp tube of her womb, punch and perforate the skin of the crucea, and cast her eggs into her body. Ray on the Creation.

PUNCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pointed instrument, which, driven by a blow, perforates bodies.

The flank of a key the punch cannot strike, because the flank is not forged with substance sufficient; but the drill cuts a true round hole. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

2. [Cant word.] A liquor made by mixing spirit with water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

The West India dry gries are occasioned by lime juice in punch. Arbutnot on Aliments.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign those animals as patrons of punch. Swift.

3. [Punchinello, Italian.] The buffoon or harlequin of the puppet-show.

Of rarefactions he sung and punch's feats. Gay.

4. Punch is a horse that is well set and well knit, having a short back and thin shoulders, with a broad neck, and well lined with flesh. Farrier's Dict.

5. [Pumilio obesus, Lat.] In contempt or ridicule, a short fat fellow.

PUNCHEON. n. f. [poinçon, Fr.]

1. An instrument driven so as to make a hole or impression.

He granted liberty of coining to certain cities and abbeys, allowing them one staple and two punchens at a rate. Camd.

2. A measure of liquids.

PUNCHER. n. f. [from punch.] An instrument that makes an impression or hole.

In the upper jaw are five teeth before, not incisors or cutters, but thick punchers. Grew's Wifem.

PUNCTILIO. n. f. A small nicety of behaviour; a nice point of exactness.

Common people are much astonished, when they hear of those solemn contests which are made among the great, upon the punctilios of a public ceremony. Addison.

Punctilio is out of doors, the moment a daughter clandestinely quits her father's house. Clarissa.

PUNCTILIOUS. adj. [from punctilio.] Nice; exact; punctual to superfluous.

Some depend on a punctilious observance of divine laws, which they hope will atone for the habitual transgression of the rest. Rogers's Sermons.

PUNCTILIOUSNESS. n. f. [from punctilios.] Nicety; exactness of behaviour.

PUNCTO. n. f. [puncta, Spanish.]

1. Nice point of ceremony.

The final conquest of Granada from the Moors, king Ferdinand displayed in his letters, with all the particularities and religious punctos and ceremonies that were observed in the reception of that city and kingdom. Bacon's Henry VII.

PUNISHABLE. adj. [puniffable, Fr. from puniſh.] Worthy of punishment; capable of punishment.
Theft is naturally punishable, but the kind of punishment is positive, and such lawful, as men shall think with discretion convenient to appoint. Hooker, b. iii. f. 9.
Sith creatures, which have no understanding, can shew no will; and where no will is, there is no sin; and only that which fineth, is subject to punishment; which way should any such creature be punishable by the law of God? Hooker.
Their bribery is less punishable, when bribery opened the

This knows my punisher; therefore as far From granting me, as I from begging peace. Milton.
PUNISHMENT. n. f. [puniffement, Fr.] Any infliction imposed in vengeance of a crime.
The house of endless pain is built thereby;
In which ten thousand tortures of punishments
The cursed creatures do eternally torment. Fa. Queen.
Unless it were a bloody murder,
I never gave them condign punishment. Shakeſp.
Thou, through the judgment of God, shalt receive just punishment for thy pride. 2 Mac. vii. 36.
Is not destruction to the wicked? and a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity? Job xxxi. 3.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues;
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat;
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.
The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established, as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice, against whatever pleasure or pain this life can shew. Locke.
PUNITION. n. f. [punition, Fr. punition, Lat.] Punishment. Ans.
PUNITIVE. adj. [from punio, Lat.] Awarding or inflicting punishment.
Neither is the cylinder charged with sin, whether by God or men, nor any punitive law enacted by either against its rolling down the hill. Hammond's Fundamentals.
PUNITORY. adj. [from punio, Lat.] Punishing; tending to punishment.
PUNK. n. f. A whore; a common prostitute; a trumpet.
She may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife. Shakeſp. Measure for Measure.
And made them fight, like mad or drunk,
For dame religion as for punk. Hudibras.
Near these a nursery erects its head,
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry,
Where infant punks their tender voices try. Dryden.
PUNSTER. n. f. [from pun.] A quibbler; a low wit who endeavours at reputation by double meaning.
His mother was cousin to Mr. Swan, gamester and punster of London. Arbutnot and Pope.
To PUNT. v. n. To play at basset and ombre.
One is for setting up an assembly for basset, where none shall be admitted to punt, that have not taken the oaths. Add.
When a duke to Janfen punts at White's,
Or city heir in mortgage melts away,
Satan himself feels far less joy than they. Pope.
PUNY. adj. [puni nē, Fr.]
1. Young.
2. Inferior; petty; of an under rate.
Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name; a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory. Shakeſp. Rich. II.
Know me not,
Left that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,
In puny battle slay me. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
Drive
The puny habitants; or if not drive,
Seduce them to our party. Milton.

PUP

- This friendship is of that strength, as to remain unshaken by such assaults, which yet are strong enough to flake down and annihilate the friendship of little puny minds. South.
Jove at their head ascending from the sea,
A shoal of puny powers attend his way. Dryden.
PUNY. n. f. A young unexperienced unseasoned wretch.
Tenderness of heart makes a man but a puny in this sin;
it spoils the growth, and cramps the crowning exploits of this vice. South's Sermons.
To PUP. v. n. [from puppy.] To bring forth whelps; used of a bitch bringing young.
PUPIL. n. f. [pupilla, Lat.]
1. The apple of the eye.
Looking in a glass, when you shut one eye, the pupil of the other, that is open, dilateth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Setting a candle before a child, bid him look upon it, and his pupil shall contract itself very much to exclude the light; as when after we have been some time in the dark, a bright light is suddenly brought in and set before us, till the pupils of our eyes have gradually contracted. Ray on the Creation.
The uvea has a muculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil of the eye. Mire.
The rays, which enter the eye at several parts of the pupil, have several obliquities to the glasses. Newton's Opticks.
2. [Pupille, Fr. pupillus, Lat.] A scholar; one under the care of a tutor.
My master fues to her, and she hath taught her tutor,
He being her pupil, to become her tutor. Shakeſp.
One of my father's servants,
With store of tears this treason 'gan unfold,
And said my guardian would his pupil kill. Fairfax.
If this arch-politician find in his pupils any remorse, any fear of God's future judgments, he persuades them that God hath for great need of men's souls, that he will accept them at any time, and upon any condition. Raleigh.
Tutors should behave reverently before their pupils. L'Eſt.
The great work of a governor is, to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.
3. A ward; one under the care of his guardian.
Tell me, thou pupil to great Pericles,
What are the grounds
To undertake so young so vast a care?
So some weak foot, which else would poorly rise,
Jove's tree adopts, and lifts him to the skies;
Through the new pupil soft'ning juices flow,
Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'rs to blow. Tidd.
PUPILAGE. n. f. [from pupil.]
1. State of being a scholar.
The severity of the father's brow, whilst they are under the discipline of pupilage, should be relaxed as fast as their age, discretion, and good behaviour allow. Locke.
2. Wardship; minority.
Three sons he dying left, all under age,
By means whereof their uncle Vortigern
Usurp'd the crown, during their pupilage;
Which the infant's tutors gathering to fear,
Them closely into Armorick did bear. Fairy Queen.
PUPILARY. adj. [pupillaris, Fr. pupillaris, Lat. from pupil.]
Pertaining to a pupil or ward.
PUPPET. n. f. [poupee, Fr. pupus, Lat.]
1. A small image moved by men in a mock drama; a wooden tragedian.
Once Zelmane could not stir; but that as if they had been puppets, whose motion stood only upon her pleasure, Basilus with servicable steps, Gynecia with greedy eyes would follow her. Sidney, b. ii.
Divers of them did keep in their houses certain things made of cotton wool, in the manner of puppets. Abbot.
His last wife was a woman of breeding, good humour and compliance; as for you, you look like a puppet moved by clock-work. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
As the pipes of some carv'd organ move,
The gilded puppets dance. Pope.
In flood impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope.
2. A word of contempt.
Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shewn
In Rome as well as I. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.
Oh excellent motion! oh exceeding puppet!
PUPPETMAN. n. f. [puppet and man.] Master of a puppet-show.
Why is a handsome wife ador'd
By every coxcomb but her lord?
From yonder puppetman inquire,
Who wisely hides his wood and wire. Swift.
PUPPETSHOW. n. f. [puppet and show.] A mock drama performed by wooden images moved by wire.
Tim, you have a taste I know,
And often see a puppetshow. Swift.
To induce him to be fond of learning, he would frequently carry him to the puppetshow. Arbutnot and Pope.
A pre-

PUR

- A president of the council will make no more impression upon my mind, than the sight of a puppetshow. Pope.
PURRY. n. f. [poupee, Fr.]
1. A whelp; progeny of a bitch.
He
Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,
As maids of thirteen do of puppy dogs. Shakeſp.
The rogues lighted me into the river with as little remorse, as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies, fifteen in the litter. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
The low to the bitch says, your puppies are all blind. L'Eſt.
Nature does the puppy's eyelid close,
Till the bright sun has nine times set and rose. Gay.
2. A name of contemptuous reproach to a man.
I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy headed monster;
a most scurvy monster! Shakeſp. Tempest.
Thus much I have added, because there are some puppies which have given it out.
I found my place taken up by an ill-bred awkward puppy, with a money bag under each arm. Addison's Guardian.
To PURRY. v. n. [from purr.] To bring whelps.
PUREBLIND. adj. [corrupted from poreblind, which is still used in Scotland; pore and blind.] Nearighted; shortsighted.
Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word,
One nickname to her purblind son and heir.
The truth appears fo naked on my side;
That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakeſp.
'Tis known to several
Of head piece extraordinary; lower messes
Perchance, are to this business purblind. Shakeſp.
Like to purblind moles, no greater light than that little which they shun. Drummond.
Darkness, that here surrounded our purblind understandings, will vanish at the dawning of eternal day. Boyle.
Drop in clear thick-sighted eyes,
They'd make them see in darkest night,
Like owls, though purblind in the light. Hudibras.
Purblind man
Sees but a part of th' chain, the nearest links;
His eyes nor carrying to that equal beam,
That's all above. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
PURENESS. n. f. [from purblind.] Shortness of sight.
PURCHASABLE. adj. [from purchase.] That may be purchased or bought.
Money being the counterbalance to all things purchasable by it, as much as you take off from the value of money, so much you add to the price of things exchanged for it. Locke.
To PURCHASE. v. a. [purchasse, Fr.]
1. To buy for a price.
You have many a purchas'd slave,
Which like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part. Shakeſp.
His sons buried him in the cave, which Abraham purchas'd of the sons of Heth. Gen. xxv.
2. To obtain at any expence, as of labour or danger.
A world who would not purchase with a bruise. Milton.
3. To expiate or recompense by a fine or forfeit.
I will be deaf to pleading and excuses,
Nor tears nor prayers shall purchase out abuses;
Therefore use none. Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.
PURCHASE. n. f. [purchasse, old Fr. from the verb.]
1. Any thing bought or obtained for a price.
He that procures his child a good mind, makes a better purchase for him, than if he laid out the money for an addition to his former acres. Locke on Education.
Our thriving dean has purchas'd land;
A purchase which will bring him clear
Above his rent four pounds a year. Swift.
2. Any thing of which possession is taken.
A beauty waiting and distressed widow Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye;
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakeſp.
The fox repairs to the wolf's cell, and takes possession of his stores; but he had little joy of the purchase. L'Eſtrange.
PURCHASER. n. f. [from purchase.] A buyer; one that gains any thing for a price.
Upon one only alienation and change, the purchaser is to pass both licence, fine and recovery. Bacon.
So unhappy have been the purchasers of church lands, that, though in such purchases, men have usually the cheapest penny-worth, yet they have not always the best bargains. South.
Most of the old statues may be well supposed to have been cheaper to their first owners, than they are to a modern purchaser. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
PURE. adj. [pur, pure, Fr. purus, Lat.]
1. Not filthy; not sullied.
There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness. Prov. xxx. 12.
2. Clear; not dirty; not muddy.
Thou purg'd stone, whose pureness doth present
My purest mind. Sidney, b. ii.

PUR

3. Unmingled; not altered by mixtures; mere.
What philosophy shall comfort a villain, that is hal'd to the rack for murdering his prince? his cup is full of pure and unmingled sorrow, his body is rent with torment, his name with ignominy, his soul with shame and sorrow, which are to last eternally. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
Pure and mixt, when applied to bodies, are much a kin to simple and compound; so a guinea is pure gold, if it has in it no alloy. Watts's Logic.
4. Not connected with any thing extrinsic: as, pure mathematics.
Mathematicks in its latitude is divided into pure and mixed; and though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in the general, as geometry; yet that which is mixed doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. Wilkins.
When a proposition expresses that the predicate is connected with the subject, it is called a pure proposition; as every true christian is an honest man. Watts.
5. Free; clear.
His mind of evil pure
Supports him, and intention free from fraud. Philips.
6. Free from guilt; guiltless; innocent.
Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin? Prov. xx. 9.
O welcome pure ey'd faith,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity.
No hand of strife is pure, but that which wins. Milton.
7. Incorrupt; not vitiated by any bad practice or opinion.
Her guiltless glory just Britannia draws
From pure religion, and impartial laws. Tickel.
8. Not vitiated with corrupt modes of speech.
As oft as I read those comedies, so oft doth found in mine ear the pure fine talk of Rome. Alcham.
9. Mere: as, a pure villain, purus patus nebulo, Lat.
The lord of the cattle was a young man of spirit, but had lately out of pure weariness of the fatigue, and having spent most of his money, left the king. Clarendon.
There happened a bloody civil war among the hawks, when the peaceable pigeons, in pure pity and good nature, send their mediators to make them friends again. L'Eſtrange's Fables.
10. Chaste; modest.
PURELY. adv. [from pure.]
1. In a pure manner; not dirtily; not with mixture.
I will purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin. Isaiah i. 25.
2. Innocently; without guilt.
3. Merely.
The being able to raise an army, and conducting it to fight against the king, was purely due to him, and the effect of his power. Clarendon, b. viii.
Upon the particular observations on the metallick and mineral bodies, I have not founded any thing but what purely and immediately concerns the natural history of those bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
I converse in full freedom with men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as having made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.
PURENESS. n. f. [from pure.]
1. Clearness; freedom from extraneous or foul admixtures.
They came to the river side, which of all the rivers of Greece had the prize for excellent pureness and sweetness, in so much as the very bathing in it was accounted exceeding healthful. Sidney.
No circumstances are like to contribute more to the advancement of learning, than exact temperance, great pure-ness of air, equality of climate, and long tranquility of government. Temple.
2. Simplicity; exemption from composition.
An essence eternal and spiritual, of absolute pureness and simplicity. Raleigh.
My love was such,
It could, though he supply'd no fuel, burn;
Rich in itself, like elemental fire,
Whole pureness does no aliment require. Dryden.
3. Innocence; freedom from guilt.
May we evermore serve thee in holiness and pureness of living. Common Prayer.
4. Freedom from vicious modes of speech.
In all this good propriety of words, and pureness of phrases in Terence, you must not follow him always in placing of them. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
PURFILE. n. f. [pourfilée, Fr.] A sort of ancient trimming for women's gowns, made of tincl and thread; called also bobbin work. Bailey.
To PURFILE. v. a. [pourfiler, Fr. proflare, Italian.] To decorate with a wrought or flowered border; to border with embroidery; to embroider.
A goodly lady clad in scarlet red,
Purged with gold and pearl of rich assay. Fa. Queen.

PUR

Emrod tufts, flow'rs purpled blue and white,
Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery, Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Shakefp.
Iris there with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers, of more mingled hew,
Than her purpled carl' can shew. Milton.
In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
Their hoods and sleeves the same, and purpled o'er With diamonds. Dryden.
PURPLE. n. f. [purpille, Fr. from the verb.] A border of PURPLEW. s. embroidery.
PURGATION. n. f. [purgatio, Fr. purgatio, Lat.]
1. The act of cleansing or purifying from vitious mixtures.
We do not suppose the separation finished, before the purg- ation of the air began. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. The act of cleansing the body by downward evacuation.
Let the physician apply himself more to purgation than to alteration, because the offence is in quantity. Bacon.
3. The act of clearing from imputation of guilt.
If any man doubt, let him put me to my purgation. Shak.
Proceed in justice, which shall have due course,
Even to the guilt or the purgation. Shakefp.
PURGATIVE. adj. [purgativus, Fr. purgativus, Lat.] Cathartick; having the power to cause evacuations downward.
Purging medicines have their purgative virtue in a fine spirit, they endure not boiling without loss of virtue. Bacon.
All that is fill'd, and all that which doth fill
All the round world, to man is but a pill;
In all it works not, but it is in all Poisonous, or purgative, or cordial. Donne.
Lenient purgatives evacuate the humours. Wifeman.
PURGATORY. n. f. [purgatorium, Fr. purgatorium, Lat.] A place in which souls are supposed by the papists to be purged by fire from carnal impurities, before they are received into heaven.
Thou thy folk, through pains of purgatory,
Dost bear unto thy bliss. Spenser's Hymn on Love.
In this age, there may be as great instances produced of real charity, as when men thought to get souls out of purga- tory. Stillington.
TO PURGE. v. a. [purger, Fr. purge, Lat.]
1. To cleanse; to clear.
It will be like that labour of Hercules, in purging the stable of Augeas, to separate from superstitious observations any thing that is clean and pure natural. Bacon.
2. To clear from impurities.
To the English court assenble now
From ev'ry region apex of idleness;
Now neighbour confines purge you of your seam. Shakefp.
Air ventilates and cools the mines, and purges and frees them from mineral exhalations. Woodward.
3. To clear from guilt.
Blood hath been shed ere now, i' th' olden time
Ere human statute purged the gen'ral weal. Shakefp.
My soul is purged from grudging hate;
And with my hand I feel my true heart's love. Shakefp.
The blood of Christ shall purge our conscience from dead works to serve God. Heb. ix. 14.
Syphax, we'll join our cares to purge away
Our country's crimes, and clear her reputation. Addison.
4. To clear from imputation of guilt.
He, I accuse,
Intends t' appear before the people, hoping
To purge himself with words. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Marquis Dorset was hasting towards him, to purge himself of some accusation. Bacon's Henry VII.
5. To sweep or put away impurities.
I will purge out from among you the rebels. Ezek. xx. 38.
Simplicity and integrity in the inward parts, may purge out every prejudice and passion. Decay of Piety.
6. To evacuate the body by stool.
Sir Philip Calthrop purged John Drakes, the shoemaker of Norwich, of the proud humour. Camden's Remains.
The frequent and wise use of emaciating diets, and of purg- ings, is a principal means of a prolongation of life. Bacon.
If he was not cured, he purged him with salt water. Arbutnot.
7. To clarify; to defecate.
TO PURGE. v. n. To have frequent stools.
PURGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A cathartick medicine; a medicine that evacuates the body by stool.
Meet we the medicine of the sickly weal,
And with him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us. Shakefp.
Pills nor laxatives I like;
Of these his gain the sharp physician makes,
And often gives a purge, but seldom takes. Dryden.
He was no great friend to purging and clifters; he was for mixing aloes with small purges. Arbutnot.
PURGER. n. f. [from purge.]
1. One who clears away any thing noxious.

PUR

This shall make
Our purpose necessary, and not envious;
We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers. Shakefp.
2. Purge; cathartick.
It is of good use in physick, if you can retain the purging virtue, and take away the unpleasant taste of the purger. Lac.
PURIFICATION. n. f. [purificatio, Fr. purificatio, Lat.]
1. The act of making pure; act of cleansing from extraneous mixture.
I discerned a considerable difference in the operations of feveral kinds of saltpetre, even after purification. Boyle.
2. The act of cleansing from guilt.
The sacraments, in their own nature, are just such as they seem, water, and bread, and wine; but because they are made signs of a secret mystery, and water is the symbol of purification of the soul from sin, and bread and wine, of Christ's body and blood; therefore the symbols receive the names of what they sign. Taylor's Worshy Communion.
3. A rite performed by the Hebrews after childbearing.
PURIFICATORY. adj. [from purify.] Having power or tendency to make pure.
PURIFIER. n. f. [from purify.] Cleanser; refiner.
He shall fit as a refiner and purifier of silver. Mal. iii. 3.
TO PURIFY. v. a. [purifier, Fr. purifico, Lat.]
1. To make pure.
2. To free from any extraneous admixture.
If any bad blood should be left in the kingdom, an honourable foreign war will vent or purify it. Bacon's Henry VII.
The mass of the air was many thousand times greater than the water, and would in proportion require a greater time to be purified. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
By chase our long-liv'd fathers earn'd their food,
Toil strung the nerves, and purified the blood. Dryden.
3. To make clear.
It ran upon so fine and delicate a ground, as one could not easily judge, whether the river did more wash the gravel, or the gravel did purify the river. Silney, b. ii.
4. To free from guilt or corruption.
He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people. Tit. ii. 14.
If God gives grace, knowledge will not stay long behind;
Since it is the same spirit and principle that purifies the heart, and clarifies the understanding. South's Sermon.
5. To free from pollution, as by lustration.
There were set six water pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews. Jn. ii. 6.
6. To clear from barbarisms or improprieties.
He saw the French tongue abundantly purified. Sprat.
TO PURIFY. v. n. To grow pure.
We do not suppose the separation of these two liquors wholly finished, before the purification of the air began, though let them begin to purify at the same time. Burnet.
PURIST. n. f. [puriste, Fr.] One superstitiously nice in the use of words.
PURITAN. n. f. [from pure.] A sectary pretending to eminent purity of religion.
The schism which the papists on the one hand, and the superstition which the puritan on the other, lay to our charge, are very justly chargeable upon themselves. Saunders.
PURITANICAL. adj. [from puritan.] Relating to puritans.
Such guides set over the several congregations will mislead them, by infilling into them puritanical and superstitious principles, that they may the more securely exercise their preby-terian tyranny. Walton.
PURITANISM. n. f. [from puritan.] The notions of a puritan.
A serious and impartial examination of the grounds, as well of popery as puritanism, according to that measure of understanding God hath afforded me. Walton.
PURITY. n. f. [puritas, Fr. puritas, Lat.]
1. Cleanness; freedom from foulness or dirt.
Her urn
Pours streams select, and purity of waters. Prior.
From the body's purity, the mind Receives a secret aid. Thomson's Summer.
2. Freedom from guilt; innocence.
Death sets us safely on shore in our long-expected Canaan, where there are no temptations, no danger of falling, but eternal purity and immortal joys secure our innocence and happiness for ever. Wake's Preparation for Death.
3. Chastity; freedom from contamination of sexes.
Could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and her marriage vow. Shakefp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
PURPLE. n. f. [this is justly supposed by Antiquary to be contracted from purpura.]
1. An embroidered and puckered border.
Himself came in next after a triumphant chariot made of carnation velvet, enriched with purple and pearl. Silney.
The jagg'd of pinks is like the inequality of oak leaves;
but they seldom have any small purples. Bacon.
2. [I know not whence derived.] A kind of medicated milk liquor, in which wormwood and aromatics are infused.
TO PURPLE.

PUR

TO PURPLE. v. n. [of this word it is doubtful what is the primitive signification; if it is refered originally to the appearance of a quick stream, which is always dimpled on the surface, it may come from pur; a pucker or fringe; but if, as the use of authors seem to show, it relates to the sound, it must be derived from purra, Swedish, to murmur, according to Mr. Lye.] To murmur; to flow with a gentle noise.
Tones are not so apt to procure sleep, as some other sounds;
as the wind, the purling of water, and humming of bees.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Instruments that have returns, as trumpets; or flexions, as cornets; or are drawn up, and put from, as sacbuts, have a purling sound; but the recorder or flute, that have none of these inequalities, give a clear sound. Bacon.
All fish from sea or shore,
Fretthet, or purling brook, or shell or fin. Milton.
My flow'ry theme,
A painted mistress, or a purling stream. Pope.
Around th' adjoining brook, that purles along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock. Thomson.
TO PURPLE. v. a. To decorate with fringe or embroidery.
When was old Sherwood's head more quaintly curl'd,
Or nature's cradle more enchas'd and purled. B. Johnson.
PURPLE. n. f. The grounds on the borders of a forest; border; inclosure.
In the purples of this forest stands
A sheepcote, fence'd about with olive trees. Shakefp.
Such civil matters fall within the purples of religion. L'Estr.
To understand all the purples of this place, and to illustrate this subject, I must venture myself into the haunts of beauty and gallantry. Speilator.
He may be left to rot among thieves in some stinking jail, merely for mistaking the purples of the law. Swift.
A party next of glit'ring dames, Thrown round the purples of St. James,
Came early out. Swift.
PURPLES. n. f. In architecture, those pieces of timber that lie across the rafters on the inside, to keep them from sinking in the middle of their length. Bailey.
TO PURLOIN. v. a. [this word is of doubtful etymology.
Skinner deduces it from pur and loin, French; Mr. Lye from purlouin, Saxon, to lie hid.] To steal; to take by theft.
He, that brave fied there finding ready dight,
Purloin'd both fied and spear, and ran away full light. F. 2.
The Arimaspian by stealth
Had, from his wakeful custody, purloin'd
The guarded gold. Milton.
They not content like felons to purloin,
Add treason to it, and debase the coin. Denham.
Some writers make all ladies purloin'd,
And knights pursuing like a whirlwind. Hudibras.
When did the muse from Fletcher scenes purloin,
As thou whole Eth'ridge dost transfuse to thine? Dryden.
Your butler purloins your liquor, and the brewer tells your hog-wash. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
Prometheus once this chain purloin'd, Diffolv'd, and into money coin'd. Swift.
PURLOINER. n. f. [from purloin.] A thief; one that steals clandestinely.
It may seem hard, to see publick purloiners sit upon the lives of the little ones, that go to the gallows. L'Estrange.
PURPARTY. n. f. [pur and part, Fr.] Share; part in division.
Each of the coparceners had an entire county allotted for her purparty. Davies on Ireland.
PURPLE. adj. [purpure, Fr. purpureus, Lat.]
1. Red tinged with blue.
The poop was beaten gold,
Purple the sails, and so perfum'd, that
The winds were love-sick with e'm. Shakefp.
You violets, that first appear,
By your pure purple mantles known;
What are you when the rose is blown?
A small oval plate, cut off a flinty pebble, and polished, is prettily variegated with a pale grey, blue, yellow, and purple. Woodward on Fossils.
2. In poetry, red.
I view a field of blood,
And Tyber rolling with a purple flood.
Their mingled limbs
Crashing at once, death dyes the purple seas
With gore. Thomson's Summer.
TO PURPLE. v. a. [purpure, Lat.] To make red; to colour with purple.
Whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke, Fulfil your pleasure. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
Cruel and fuddain, hast thou since
Purpled thy nail in blood of innocence?
Though fall'n on evil days,
In darkness, and with dangers compass'd round,
And solitude! yet, not alone, whilst thou Vist'rt my slumbers nightly; or when morn
Purples the East. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xxx.

PUR

Throw hither all your quaint enamel'd eyes,
That on the green turf flick the honied show'rs,
And purple all the ground with vernal flow'rs. Milton.
Auroa had but newly chas'd the night,
And purpled o'er the sky with blushing light. Dryden.
Not with more glories in th' ethereal plain,
The sun first rises o'er the purpled main. Pope.
Reclining soft in blissful bow'rs,
Purpled sweet with springing flow'rs. Fenton.
PURPLES. n. f. [without a singular.] Spots of a livid red, which break out in malignant fevers; a purple fever.
PURPLISH. adj. [from purple.] Somewhat purple.
I could change the colour, and make it purplish. Boyle.
PURPORT. n. f. [purporte, Fr.] Design; tendency of a writing or discourse.
That Plato intended nothing less, is evident from the whole scope and purport of that dialogue. Norris.
TO PURPORT. v. a. [from the noun.] To intend; to tend to show.
There was an article against the reception of the rebels, purporting, that if any such rebel should be required of the prince confederate, that the prince confederate should command him to avoid the country. Bacon's Henry VII.
They in most grave and solemn wife unfolded Matter, which little purported, but words
PURPOSE. n. f. [propos, Fr. propositum, Lat.]
1. Intention; design.
He quit the house of purpose, that their punishment Might have the freer course. Shakefp. King Lear.
Change this purpose,
Which being so horrible, so bloody, must Lead on to some foul issue. Shakefp.
He with troops of horsemen beset the passages of purpose, that when the army should set forward, he might in the streights, sit for his purpose, set upon them. Knalles.
And I persuade me God hath not permitted
His strength again to grow, were not his purpose
To use him farther yet. Milton's Agonistes.
St. Aulfin hath laid down a rule to this very purpose. Burn.
They, who are desirous of a name in painting, should read and make observations of such things as they find for their purpose. Dryden's Dives of Hell.
He travelled the world, on purpose to converse with the most learned men. Guardian, N<sup>o</sup> 165.
The common materials, which the ancients made their ships of, were the ornus or wild ash; the fir was likewise used for this purpose. Arbutnot.
I do this, on purpose to give you a more sensible impression of the imperfection of your knowledge. Watts.
Where men err against this method, it is usually on purpose, and to shew their learning. Swift.
2. Effect; consequence.
To small purpose had the council of Jerusalem been assembled, if once their determination being set down, men might afterwards have defended their former opinions. Hobbes.
The ground will be like a wood, which keepeth out the sun, and so continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze, to purpose that year. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Their design is a war, whenever they can open it with a prospect of succeeding to purpose. Temple.
Such first principles will serve us to very little purpose, and we shall be as much at a loss with, as without them, if they may, by any human power, such as is the will of our teachers, or opinions of our companions, be altered or lost in us. Locke.
He that would relish success to purpose, should keep his passion cool, and his expectation low. Collier on Despre.
What the Romans have done is not worth notice, having had little occasion to make use of this art, and what they have of it to purpose being borrowed from Aristotle. Baker.
3. Instance; example.
'Tis common for double-dealers to be taken in their own snares, as for the purposes in the matter of power. L'Estr.
TO PURPOSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To intend; to design;
to resolve.
What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform. Hobbes.
It is a purpose'd thing, and grows by plot,
To curb the nobility. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
I am purpose'd, that my mouth shall not transgress. Pf. xvii.
This is the purpose that is purpose'd upon the whole earth. Jf. xiv. 26.
Paul purpose'd in the spirit, to go to Jerusalem. Acts xix. 21.
The christian captains, purposing to retire home, placed on each side of the army four ranks of waggons. Knalles.
The whole included race his purpose'd prey.
Oaths were not purpos'd more than law,
To keep the good and just in awe,
But to confine the bad and sinful,
Like moral cattle in a pinfold. Hudibras.
Doubling my crime, I promise and deceive,
Purpose to slay, whilst swearing to forgive. Prior.

PURPOSELY.

PUR

PURPOSELY. adv. [from purpose.] By design; by intention. Being the instrument which God hath purposefully framed, thereby to work the knowledge of salvation in the hearts of men, what cause is there wherefore it should not be acknowledged a most apt mean? Hooker.

I have purposefully avoided to speak any thing concerning the treatment due to such persons. Addison.
In compiling this discourse, I purposefully declined all offensive and displeasing truths. Atterbury.

The vulgar thus through imitation err,
As oft the learned by being singular;
So much they scorn the crowd, that if the throng
By chance go right, they purposefully go wrong. Pope.

PURPRISE. n. f. [from purpris, old Fr. purprijum, law Lat.] A cloth or inclosure; as also the whole compass of a manour.

The place of justice is hallowed; and therefore not only the bench, but the foot-pace and precincts, and purprise ought to be preserved without corruption. Bacon's Essays.

PURR. n. f. A sea lark.

TO PURR. v. a. To murmur as a cat or leopard in pleasure.

PURSE. n. f. [from burse, Fr. purse, Welsh.] A small bag in which money is contained.

She bears the purse too; she is a region in Guiana all gold and bounty.

Shall the son of England prove a thief,
And take purse?

He sent certain of the chief prisoners, richly appraised with their purse full of money, into the city. Knolles.

I will give him the thousand pieces, and, to his great surprise, present him with another purse of the same value. Add.

TO PURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into a purse.
I am spell-caught by Philidel,
And purse within a net. Dryden.

I purse it up, but little reck'ning made,
'Till now that this extremity compell'd,
I find it true. Milton.

2. To contract as a purse.
Thou cried'st,
And did'st contract and purse thy brow together,
As if thou then had'st shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit. Shakespeare, Othello.

PURSENET. n. f. [from purse and net.] A net of which the mouth is drawn together by a string.

Conies are taken by pursetnets in their burrows. Mortimer.

PURSLAIN. n. f. [from portulaca, Lat.] A plant.

The flower of purslain consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose, out of whose flower-cup, which consists of one leaf, arises the pointal, which, together with the flower-cup, becomes a fruit, for the most part oval, full of small seeds, and furnished with two shells or husks at top; of which the outer one, which was the part of the flower-cup that was split in two, opens first; and the inner one, which is the pointal enlarged, opens last, doubly and transversely, while the lower part of the flower-cup adheres to the foot-stalk. Miller.

The medicaments, proper to diminish the milk, are lettuce, purslain and endive. Wise's Surgery.

PURSUABLE. adj. [from purse.] What may be pursued.

PURSUANCE. n. f. [from purse.] Prosecution; process.

PURSUANT. adj. [from purse.] Done in consequence or prosecution of any thing.

TO PURSUE. v. a. [from pursequere, Fr.]

1. To chase; to follow in hostility.
Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursues. Shakespeare.

When Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, and pursued. Gen. xiv. 14.

To thy speed add wings,
Left with a whip of scorpions I pursue Thy lingering. Milton.

2. To prosecute; to continue.
As righteousness tendeth to life; so he that pursueth evil, pursueth it to his own death. Prov. xii. 19.

Inferior to pursue
Vain war with heaven. Milton.

I will pursue
This ancient story, whether false or true. Dryden.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end. Locke.

3. To imitate; to follow as an example.
The fame of ancient matrons you pursue,
And stand a blameless pattern to the new. Dryden.

4. To endeavour to attain.
Let us not then pursue
Splendid vassalage.
We happiness pursue; we fly from pain;
Yet the pursuit, and yet the flight is vain. Prior.

PUR

TO PURSUE. v. n. To go on; to proceed.
I have, pursues Carneades, wondered chymists should not consider.

PURSUER. n. f. [from purse.] One who follows in hostility.
Fled with the rest,

And falling from a hill he was to be bruised,
That the pursuers took him. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

His swift pursuers from heav'n's gates discern
Th' advantage, and descending tread us down
Thus drooping. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.

Like a declining statesman left forlorn
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.

PURSUITE. n. f. [from purse, Fr.]

1. The act of following with hostile intention.
Arm, warriors, arm for fight! the foe at hand,
Whom fled we thought, will have us long pursuit. Milton.

2. Endeavour to attain.
This means they long propos'd, but little gain'd,
Yet after much pursuit, at length obtain'd. Dryden.

Its honours and vanities are continually passing before him, and inviting his pursuit. Rogers.

He has annexed a secret pleasure to the idea of any thing that is new or uncommon, that he might encourage us in the pursuit after knowledge, and engage us to search into the wonders of his creation. Addison.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions, and to the removal of those uneasinesses it feels in its longings after them. Locke.

3. Prosecution.
He concluded with sighs and tears, to conjure them, that they would no more press him to give his consent to a thing so contrary to his reason, the execution whereof would break his heart, and that they would give over further pursuit of it. Clarke.

PURSUIVANT. n. f. [from pursequant, Fr.] A state messenger; an attendant on the heralds.

How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The fitting skies, like flying pursuivants. Fairy Queen.

Pursuivants he often for them sent. Hubbard.

These grey locks, the pursuivants of death,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer. Shakespeare.

Send out a pursuivant at arms
To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power
Before him-rising. Shakespeare, Richard III.

For helmets, crests, mantles, and supporters, I leave the reader to Edmund Bolton, Gerard Leigh, John Ferny, and John Guillim Portsmouth, pursuivants of arms, who have diligently laboured in armory. Camerden's Remains.

The pursuivants came next,
And like the heralds each his luteon bore. Dryden.

PURSY. adj. [from purse, Fr.] Shortbreathed and fat.
In the fatness of these purse times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea croud and woo for leave to do it good. Shakespeare.

Now breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease,
And purse insolence shall break his wind
With fear and horrid flight. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.

By these, the Medes
Perfume their breaths, and cure old purse men. Temple.

Grown fat and purse by retail
Of pots of beer and bott'd ale. Hudibras, p. iii.

Roast the lamb with fire, his head with his legs and with the purteance thereof. Ex. xii. 9.

The shaft against a rib did glance,
And gall'd him in the purteance. Hudibras, p. i.

TO PURVEY. v. a. [from pourvoir, Fr.]

1. To provide with conveniences. This sense is now not in use.
Give no odds to your foes, but do purvey Yourself of sword before that bloody day. Fa. Queen.

His house with all convenience was purvey'd,
The rest he found. Dryden.

2. To procure.
What though from outmost land and sea purvey'd
For him; each rarer tributary life Bleeds not. Thomson's Summer.

TO PURVEY. v. n. To buy in provisions.
I the praise
Yield thee, so well this day thou hast purvey'd. Milton.

PURVEYANCE. n. f. [from purvey.]

1. Provision.
Whence mounting up, they find purveyance meet
Of all, that royal princes court became. Fa. Queen.

2. Procurement of victuals.
Some lands be more changeable than others; as for their lying near to the borders, or because of great and continual purveyances that are made upon them. Bacon.

PURVEYOR.

PUS

PURVEYOR. n. f. [from purvey.]

1. One that provides victuals.
The purveyors or victuallers are much to be condemned, as not a little faulty in that behalf. Raleigh.

2. A procurer; a pimp.
These women are such cunning purveyors!
Mark where their appetites have once been pleased,
The same resemblance in a younger lover,
Lies brooding in their fancies the same pleasures. Dryden.

The stranger, ravish'd at his good fortune, is introduced to some imaginary title; for this purveyor has her representatives of some of the finest ladies. Addison.

PURVIEW. n. f. [from purveu, French.] Proviso; providing clause.

Though the petition expresses only treason and felony, yet the act is general against all appeals in parliament; and many times the purview of an act is larger than the preamble or the petition. Hale's Common Law of England.

PURULENCE. n. f. [from purulent.] Generation of pus or purulency. } matter.

Consumptions are induced by purulency in any of the viscera. Arbutnot on Diet.

PURULENT. adj. [from purulent, Fr. purulentus, Lat.] Consisting of pus or the running of wounds.

A carcase of man is most infectious and odious to man, and purulent matter of wounds to sound flesh. Bacon.

It spews a filthy froth
Of matter purulent and white,
Which happen'd on the skin to light,
And there corrupting on a wound, Spreads leprosy. Swift's Miscel.

An acrimonious or purulent matter, stagnating in some organ, is more easily deposited upon the liver than any other part. Arbutnot on Aliments.

PUS. n. f. [Latin.] The matter of a well digested fore.

Acid tubercles break the vessels, and produce an ichor instead of laudable pus. Arbutnot.

TO PUSH. v. a. [from pusher, Fr.]

1. To strike with a thrust.
If the ox push a man-servant, he shall be stoned. Ex. xxi.

2. To force or drive by impulse of any thing.
The youth push away my feet. Job xxx. 12.

3. To force not by a quick blow, but by continued violence.
Shew your mended faiths,
To push destruction and perpetual flame
Out of the weak door of our fainting land. Shakespeare.

Through thee will we push down our enemies. Pf. xlv. 5.

Waters forcing way,
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines. Milton.

The description of this terrible scene threw her into an hysterick fit, which might have proved dangerous, if Cornelius had not been pushed out of the room. Arbutnot and Pope.

4. To press forward.
He forewarns his care
With rules to push his fortune or to bear. Dryden.

With such impudence did he push this matter, that when he heard the cries of above a million of people begging for their bread, he termed it the clamorous of faction. Addison.

Arts and sciences, in one and the same century, have arrived at great perfection, and no wonder, since every age has a kind of universal genius, which inclines those that live in it to some particular studies, the work then being pushed on by many hands, must go forward. Dryden.

5. To urge; to drive.
Ambition pushes the soul to such actions, as are apt to procure honour to the actor. Addison's Spectator.

6. To enforce; to drive to a conclusion.
We are pushed for an answer, and are forced at last freely to confess, that the corruptions of the administration were intolerable. Swift.

7. To importune; to tease.
TO PUSH. v. n.

1. To make a thrust.
But issues, ere the fight, his dread command,
That none shall dare
With shorted sword to stab in closer war, Nor push with biting point, but strike at length. Dryden.

A calf will go manage his head, as though he would push with his horns even before they shoot. Ray.

Lambs, though they never saw the actions of their species, push with their foreheads, before the budding of a horn. Addison.

2. To make an effort.
War seem'd asleep for nine long years; at length
Both sides resolv'd to push, we try'd our strength. Dryden.

3. To make an attack.
The king of the South shall push at him, and the king of the North shall come against him. Dan. xi. 40.

PUSH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Thrust; the act of striking with a pointed instrument.

PUS

Ne might his corse be harmed
With dint of sword or push of pointed spear. Spenser.

So great was the puillance of his push,
That from his saddle quite he did him bear. Fa. Queen.

They, like resolute men, stood in the face of the breach, receiving them with deadly shot and push of pike, in such furious manner, that the Turks began to retire. Knolles.

2. An impulse; force impressed.
Jove was not more
With infant nature, when his spacious hand
Had rounded this huge ball of earth and seas
To give it the first push, and see it roll Along the vast abyss. Addison's Guardian.

3. Assault; attack.
He gave his countenance against his name,
To laugh with gybing boys, and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

When such a resistance is made, these bold talkers will draw in their horns, when their fierce and feeble pushes against truth are repelled with pushing and confidence. Watts.

4. A forcible struggle; a strong effort.
A sudden push gives them the overthrow;
Ride, ride, Mevlala. Shakespeare.

Away he goes, makes his push, stands the shock of a battle, and compounds for leaving of a leg behind him. L'Estrange.

We have beaten the French from all their advanced posts, and driven them into their last entrenchments: one vigorous push, one general assault will force the enemy to cry out for quarter. Addison.

5. Exigence; trial.
We'll put the matter to the present push. Shakespeare.

'Tis common to talk of dying for a friend; but when it comes to the push, 'tis no more than talk. L'Estrange.

The question we would put, is not whether the sacrament of the mass be as truly propitiatory, as those under the law? but whether it be as truly a sacrifice? if so, then it is a true proper sacrifice, and is not only commemorative or representative, as we are told at a push. Atterbury.

6. A sudden emergence.
There's time enough for that;
Left they desire, upon this push, to trouble
Your joys with like relation. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

7. [From pusula, Lat.] A pimple; an efflorescence; a wheal.
He that was praised to his hurt, should have a push rise upon his nose; as a blister will rise upon one's tongue, that tells a lie. Bacon's Essays.

having such a body in his way. Clarendon, b. viii.
Those who have lived wickedly before, must meet with a great deal more trouble, because they are put upon changing the whole course of their life. Tillotson.
This caution will put them upon considering, and teach them the necessity of examining more than they do. Locke.

PUT

- It need not be any wonder, why I should employ myself upon that study, or put others upon it. Walker.
He replied, with some vehemence, that he would undertake to prove trade would be the ruin of the English nation;
I would fain have put him upon it. Addison.
This put me upon observing the thickness of the glass, and considering whether the dimensions and proportions of the rings may be truly derived from it by computation. Newton.
It banishes from our thoughts a lively sense of religion, and puts us upon so eager a pursuit of the advantages of life, as to leave us no inclination to reflect on the great author of them. Atterbury.
These wretches put us upon all mischief, to feed their lusts and extravagancies. Swift.
65. To PUT upon. To impose; to lay upon.
When in swinish sleep,
What cannot you and I perform upon
Th' unguarded Duncan? what not put upon His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell? Shakefp. Macbeth.
66. To PUT upon trial. To expose or summon to a solemn and judicial examination.
Christ will bring all to life, and then they shall be put every one upon his own trial, and receive judgment. Locke.
Jack had done more wisely, to have put himself upon the trial of his country, and made his defence in form. Arbutnot.
To PUT. v. n.

rennet is turned. Floyer.
PUTREFACTION. n. s. [putrefaction, Fr. putris and facio, Lat.]
The state of growing rotten; the act of making rotten.
Putrefaction is a kind of fermentation, or intestine motion of bodies, which tends to the destruction of that form of their existence, which is said to be their natural state. Quincy.
If the spirit protrude a little, and that motion be inordinate, there followeth putrefaction, which ever dissolveth the consistence of the body into much inequality. Bacon.
Vegetable putrefaction is produced by throwing green vegetables in a heap in open warm air, and pressing them together, by which they acquire a putrid stercoraceous taste and odour. Arbutnot on Aliments.
From swampy fens,
Where putrefaction into life ferments,
And breathes destructive myriads. Thomson's Summer.
PUTREFACTIVE. adj. [from putrefacio, Lat.] Making rotten.
They make putrefactive generations, conformable unto fe-minal productions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Many ill projects are undertaken, and private suits putrefy the publick good. Bacon.
The ulcer itself being putrefied, I scarified it and the parts about, so far as I thought necessary, permitting them to bleed freely, and thrust out the rotten flesh. Wifeman.
A wound was so putrefied, as to endanger the bone. Temple.
Such a constitution of the air, as would naturally putrefy raw flesh, must endanger by a mortification. Arbutnot.
To PUTREFY. v. n. To rot.
From the sole of the foot, even unto the head, there is no soundness in it, but wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores. Jf. i. 6.
All imperfect mixture is apt to putrefy, and watry substances are more apt to putrefy than oily. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
These humors, though not revive, embalm and spice
The world, which else would putrefy with vice. Donne.
The pain proceeded from some acrimony in the serum, which, falling into this declining part, putrefied. Wifeman.
PUTRESCENCE. n. s. [from putresco, Latin.] The state of rotting.
Now if any ground this effect from gall or choler, because being the fiery humour, it will readiest surmount the water, we may confess in the common putrescence, it may promote elevation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
PUTRESCENT. adj. [putrescens, Lat.] Growing rotten.
Aliment is not only necessary for repairing the fluids and solids of an animal, but likewise to keep the fluids from the putrescent alkaline state, which they would acquire by constant motion. Arbutnot on Aliments.
PUTRID. adj. [putride, Fr. putridus, Lat.] Rotten; corrupt.
The wine to putrid blood converted flows. Waller.
If a nurse feed only on flesh, and drink water, her milk, instead of turning sour, will turn putrid, and smell like urine. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Putrid fever is that kind of fever, in which the humours, or part of them, have so little circulatory motion, that they fall into an intestine one, and putrefy, which is commonly the case after great evacuations, great or excessive heat. Quin.
